[9]Stanbery left his position as attorney general to serve as counsel to President Andrew Johnson in his impeachment trial. When Johnson again nominated Stanbery as attorney general after the trial, the Senate rejected the nomination.

[10]President Johnson sought to replace Secretary Stanton in 1867, but Stanton refused to resign, citing the Tenure of Office Act. Suspended on August 18, 1867, Stanton was reinstated on January 13, 1868.

[11]Second dates indicate a renomination and reconfirmation at beginning of a second presidential term, under provisions of the Tenure of Office Act, which limited cabinet officers to a four-year term unless they were renominated and reconfirmed. The act was in effect from 1867 to 1887, when it was repealed. Presidents continued to renominate cabinet officers they wished to continue for a second term until President Woodrow Wilson stopped the practice in 1919.

[12]Apparently a recess appointment serving during July and August 1874 but nomination was never submitted to Senate; succeeded by Marshall Jewell, who began serving in September with his nomination submitted to the Senate at the next session beginning in December 1874.
