Foreword

The Bureau of Health Professions of the Health Resources and Services Administration (HRSA) has a mission to provide leadership to improve the training, distribution, utilization, and quality of personnel required to staff the nation's health care system. The Geriatric Education Centers (GECs), which are funded by HRSA, have become recognized as a national force in educating health educators and health professionals to provide appropriate care to older adults in this country. Thus, the Interdisciplinary, Geriatrics and Allied Health Branch receives frequent requests for educational materials developed by the GECs.

The Bureau is grateful for the assistance of Dr. Joan B. Wood and her staff of the Virginia GEC for the compilation of this Resource Directory. The GECs are continually involved in the development of educational programs and resources. The current collection represents materials available to the public in the Spring of 1998. Individual GECs may be contacted for more recent materials.

For the convenience of those seeking educational materials on a particular topic, the Directory has been compiled by content area. It has also been cross-indexed by GEC and by format. The format categories are: written materials, electronic multimedia resources, and presentation packages.

It is our hope that schools of health professions, community agencies, professional associations, provider groups, and others interested in education/training materials in geriatrics will benefit from the use of this Directory.

1. Conducting a Culturally Sensitive Interview	1993
-------------------------------------------------------	------

This videotape features the internationally known Native American medical anthropologist Dr. Spero Manson. Dr. Manson has authored numerous articles and publications related to the process for conducting individual-specific, and culture-specific health beliefs and practices so that the provider and the client can negotiate an individualized plan of care. In this videotape, Dr. Manson role models the process of conducting an ethnographic client centered interview with an older Native American female with Diabetes. This videotape has been utilized in curricula of undergraduate and professional educational programs as well as continuing education workshops across the United States.

2. What Makes Learning Powerful: Problem Based Learning	1993

In the past few years, a lot of attention has been given to the need for adult learners to be active in the process of learning. One of the strategies that has been associated with active learning is the Problem-Based style. In this video, Dr. Wilkerson discusses advantages of this process.

1. Videotape Series for Staff Working in Long Term Care Facilities 1996

This seven (7) videotape series was created for staff working in long-term care (LTC) facilities. The videotapes address circumstances faced by staff on a daily basis when caring for elderly clients. Upon completion staff members will be available to approach and address the issues discussed in the videos with new knowledge and understanding. The tapes may be viewed individually or they can be easily incorporated into educational programs at LTC facilities. The series is reasonably priced at $25.00 per tape or $150.00 per set.

Videotape titles include:

- Impact of depression in older adults (17 min.)
- Rehabilitation focus in long term care institutions, part I (18 min.)
- Rehabilitation focus in long term care institutions, part II (20 min.)
- Sexuality and older adults (27 min.)
- Urinary incontinence management in the elderly (23 min.)
- Wound care (34 min.)
- Pharmacology in the elderly (25 min.)

Guide 1: Conceptions of Health and Illness Among Older Blacks in America
(Wilbur Watson, Ph.D.)

Belief systems play major roles in human health behaviors. This guide provides extensive discussions on beliefs in the occult, the spiritual, in folk medicine, etc., and on how those beliefs influence our health behaviors and outcomes. Traditional medical practices are compared to modern biomedical ones.

Guide 2: A Historical Overview of Health and Older Blacks in America
(Wilbur Watson, Ph.D.)

A discussion of the impact of slavery and its practices on the health of African Americans is given along with an extensive annotated bibliography. For generations, the only healthcare available to African Americans during slavery was via traditional healers. Belief systems developed that continue to influence health decisions made by African Americans today.

Guide 3: Normal Aging and Health of Older Blacks in Modern American Society (Veronica J. Scott, M.D., MPH)

The World Health Organization's definition of health is used as the framework to discuss psychological, social, and physical variables that affect health status.

Critical life events are discussed and black/white older adult comparisons are made. Social indices and barriers to access of care are discussed in the context of differential morbidity and mortality.

Guide 4: Acute and Chronic Illness in Older Blacks in America

(Veronica J. Scott, M.D., MPH)

The ten major causes of death in older African Americans are discussed in the context of acute and chronic illness. The interactive effects on health outcomes are discussed for co-morbid conditions commonly found in older blacks, e.g., diabetes, kidney disease, hypertension, stroke, and heart disease.

Guide 5: The Aging Eye: A Focus on Glaucoma in Older Blacks

(Ronald McFarland, M.D.)

The consequences of vision loss in older adults are discussed along with eye anatomy, eye physiology, and common eye conditions such as diabetic retinopathy, glaucoma, cataracts, and macular degeneration. Conditions of particular concern to older blacks are discussed in detail.

The above guides are available for $395.00 each or $1,580.00 ( plus $20.00 Shipping and Handling) for all five. Contact: Veronica J. Scott, M.D., MPH at MCGEC.

An innovative, interdisciplinary, multi-cultural model for teaching self-assessment and exploration of personal issues in death and dying for health care professionals can be implemented as a one-day workshop, "Exploring Personal Issues in Death and Dying." The model involves plenary group sessions and an emphasis on small group discussion with professional group leaders, as the medium for self-assessment and personal learning. The core conference staff is represented by a collaboration between MCGEC, the Stanford GEC, and the Western Michigan University Rural Interdisciplinary Training Project. The workshop is available for two sites per year, for 70 participants at each site, at a cost of $16,500 per site, which covers all expenses such as food, location, speakers, small group leaders, travel, training manual, etc. Contact: Irwin Goldzweig, MS, c/o MCGEC.

Health Promotion Curriculum Module Series

Over the course of the last decade, research in health promotion has documented the positive effects of a healthy lifestyle on health outcomes. A growing body of evidence clearly indicates that healthy behaviors play a major role in preventing unnecessary disease, postponing disability and improving quality of life for all age groups, including older adults and that changing certain health behaviors, even in old age, can benefit health and quality of life. The overall purpose of the Northwest Geriatric Education Center's Curriculum Module Series is to provide community-based providers in the field of aging with a set of self-study guides to assist them in developing and implementing various health promotion interventions to prevent disease and postpone further disability for the older adults they serve.

Each Curriculum Module developed by NWGEC faculty/consultants covers a specific age-related physical or mental health condition that can be prevented, postponed, or

2. Behavioral Disorders
Thomas R. Loepfe, MD; Franciscan Skemp Healthcare, La Crosse, WI, Kathy A. Biernat, MS; Medical College of Wisconsin, Produced by Wisconsin Geriatrics Education Center/Medical College of Wisconsin, Training manual, incorporate sides, 59 text pages. At the conclusion of the module, the learner will be able to: describe the differences between environmental, physical and psychological contributors to behavioral disorders, identify strategies to assess a behavioral disorder, distinguish between behavioral disorders treatable and not treatable with medications, compare and contrast the following types of behavioral disorders: agitation (aggression and sundowning), wandering, psychosis, sleep disorders in dementia, apply knowledge of behavioral disorders in the elderly to a case study involving one

4. Dementia
Edith Burns, MD, University of Wisconsin, Geriatrics Institute, Virginia Rediske, MA, Medical College of Wisconsin, Produced by Wisconsin Geriatric Education Center/ Medical College of Wisconsin, training manual, incorporates slides, 55 text pages. The manual is designed to achieve the following objectives: develop a differential diagnosis identifying the common etiologies of dementia, describe the relevant assessment of an individual presenting with memory loss for a first time evaluation, develop a diagnostic/therapeutic plan to optimize function in the most independent setting, and describe appropriate support resources available in the community for patients and families dealing with dementia.

5. GEC Pipeline monthly
national newsletter for GEC's

6. Geriatric Incontinence
David A. Momont, MD and Sheila L. Momont, MD; Gundersen Lutheran, La Crosse, WI, Kathy A. Biernat, MS; Medical College of Wisconsin, Produced by Wisconsin Geriatrics Education Center/Medical College of Wisconsin, Training manual, incorporate sides, 56 text pages. At the conclusion of the module, the learner will be able to cite the epidemiology and public health importance of incontinence in the elderly, evaluate this symptom in their elderly patients, perform the necessary history and physical examination to differentiate between the currently recognized causes of incontinence, compare and contrast the following types of incontinence:

urge, stress and mixed, formulate a treatment plan for each of the types of incontinence described

7. Geriatrics Pharmacology: New Drugs for Old People

David Watts, MD; University of Wisconsin-Madison, Kathy A. Biernat, MS; Medical College of Wisconsin, Produced by Wisconsin Geriatrics Education Center/ Medical College of Wisconsin, Training manual, incorporate sides, 83 text pages. At the conclusion of the module, the learner will be able to: Describe changes in aging physiology that affect drug handling (i.e. absorption, distribution, metabolism, and excretion). The resident will be able to describe these changes with respect to changes in body composition, changes in liver and kidney functions and enhanced or decreased levels of receptor sensitivity. Contrast the patterns of drug usage in the elderly with drug use patterns in younger populations. Explain how patterns of drug use in the elderly may lead to increased incidence of adverse reactions. Given a clinical scenario, critically assess the positive, negative or lack of effects of medication on a patient's ability to function

8. Geriatric Physiology

Robert Phillips, Marshfield Clinic, Virginia Rediske, MA, Medical College of Wisconsin, produced by Wisconsin Geriatric Education Center, Medical College of Wisconsin, training manual, incorporates slides, 90 text pages. The module is designed to achieve the following objectives: define aging and describe physiologic changes of aging depicting alterations in rhythms, pulsatile secretions and complexity, describe the principle changes with aging including changes in height, body water and body fat, identify key components of physiologic aging in the following selected organ systems: Cardiovascular, Renal, CNS, Endocrine and Immune, and utilizing case studies explain what decompensation of the cardiovascular, central nervous and endocrine systems result in: including diastolic dysfunction and congestive heart failure; delirium as the initial manifestation of acute illness in the elderly

9. Geriatric Prevention: The Role of Preventive Medicine in Optimizing Active Life Expectancy

Amy Helwig, MD; Columbia Family Medicine Residency, Milwaukee, WI, Kathy A. Biernat, MS; Medical College of Wisconsin, Produced by Wisconsin Geriatrics Education Center/Medical College of Wisconsin, Training manual, incorporate sides, 56 text pages. At the conclusion of the module, the learner will be able to: Understand the role of prevention on Quality of life Dependence on others, Potential institutionalization, Appreciate the importance of exercise, home environment, and nutrition for the elderly Incorporate adaptations for history and physical exam in the elderly patient, Appreciate the lack of evidence (and potential lack of evidence) behind current prevention recommendations, Emphasize preventive techniques that impact the quality of life and decrease mortality.

10. Immobility
 Scott Erickson, MD, Marshfield Clinic, Virginia Rediske, MA, Medical College of Wisconsin, produced by Wisconsin Geriatrics Education Center/Medical College of Wisconsin, training manual, incorporate sides, 50 text pages. The module is designed to achieve the following objectives: define the physiologic and medical complications of progressive immobility, state the assessment parameters which can be used to determine balance/mobility, state the objectives for the treatment of immobility, and given a patient scenario, evaluate options in treatment including physical therapy, occupational therapy and assistive devices and chose appropriately.
11. Long-Term Care Systems
 Rich Kane, MD, University of Wisconsin, Geriatrics Institute, Virginia Rediske, MA, Medical College of Wisconsin, Produced by Wisconsin Geriatrics Education Center/ Medical College of Wisconsin, training manual, incorporates slides, 60 text pages. The module is designed to achieve the following objectives: describe/contrast the different living environments for elderly people, institutional and non-institutional, explain the concept of a living environment which is the least restrictive, yet provides adequate/ appropriate care, identify the goals of the multidisciplinary team in a nursing home, and describe the role of the physician as part of the multidisciplinary team
12. Osteoporosis
 Nadeem Siddiqui, MD; Medical College of Wisconsin, Kathy A. Biernat, MS; Medical College of Wisconsin, Produced by Wisconsin Geriatrics Education Center/Medical College of Wisconsin, training manual, incorporate sides, 49 text pages. At the conclusion of the module, the learner will be able to: differentiate between osteoporosis, osteopenia, osteomalacia, compare and contrast the different types of osteoporosis (including Idiopathic Osteoporosis, Type I Osteoporosis and Type II Osteoporosis), describe the BMD Independent and BMD Dependent risk factors for osteoporosis, discuss Bone Mineral Density Measurement with respect to indications for use, advantages and disadvantages, and interpretation of T and z scores, describe the role of Calcium and Vitamin D in the treatment of osteoporosis, describe the role and indications for use of the following in the treatment of osteoporosis: Estrogen, Bisphosphonates, Calcitonin, Fluoride.
13. Post-Graduate Educational Opportunities in Geriatric Dentistry 1993
14. Practical Approaches to Geriatric Care
 Edmund Duthie, Jr., MD; Medical College of Wisconsin, Kathy A. Biernat, MS; Medical College of Wisconsin, Produced by Wisconsin Geriatrics Education

Center/Medical College of Wisconsin, Training manual, incorporate slides, 39 text pages. At the conclusion of the module, the learner will be able to: Differentiate between geriatrics and gerontology, Distinguish between life span and life expectancy, Describe the characteristics of the geriatric population, Contrast the geriatric population from other groups of patients, Identify the leading causes of death and the major medical conditions of the geriatric population, Optimize patient care by using function as an organizational factor, Use a specific instrument of assessment (Barthel/Æs) to screen geriatric patients 100% of the time for function, Assess the activities of instrumental and activities of daily living 100% of the time when indicated.
