PEACE CORPS WRITERS’ BOOKS
IN THE LIBRARY OF CONGRESS

PEACE CORPS 50TH ANNIVERSARY,
SEPTEMBER 22, 2011

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

This bibliography owes its existence to an exchange of letters between Rep. John Garamendi (Ethiopia, 1966–68) and Dr. James Billington, the Librarian of Congress. In his letter of December 17, 2010 [see http://peacecorpsworldwide.org/pc-writers/files/2011/01/letter.pdf], the Honorable Rep. Garamendi asked Dr. Billington to mark the special 50th anniversary of the Peace Corps on September 22, 2011, “by establishing a collection of books about the Peace Corps experience written by former Peace Corps Volunteers and Peace Corps staff.” In response, the Librarian of Congress offered to develop “a bibliography of books and creative works by former volunteers that could be made available through the Library’s Web site.”

The bibliographer (Rex A. Hudson, Bolivia, 1970–71) is grateful to the following Library of Congress persons:

- Sabrina C. Thomas, Program Planning Specialist, Library Services, for managing this project so efficiently;
- Brynda Joyce Harris of the Library’s Congressional Relations Office for conducting liaison with Congress;
- Cindy E. Moore, Office of the Librarian’s Chief of Staff, for creating the cover artwork and preparing the page layout for the printed version using Adobe’s InDesign software;
- Roberta W. Goldblatt, Section Head, Federal Research Division, for supporting the project so helpfully;
- William E. Kellum, Office of Special Initiatives (OSI), for coordinating the Web-site version of the bibliography; and

The bibliographer acknowledges “The Bibliography of Books by Peace Corps Writers” (http://www.peacecorpswriters.org/pages/depts/resources/bibliog/bib.html). Edited by John Coyne and published by Marian Haley Beil, PeaceCorpsWriters.org is an associate of Amazon.com. The bibliographer relied on PeaceCorpsWriters.org as an authoritative guide for identifying most returned Peace Corps authors. However, he used the Library of Congress Catalog as the source of all bibliographic data. The bibliographer also acknowledges the publishers of the cited books for the book descriptions quoted in the annotations.

PREFACE

This is a selected bibliography of authors with Peace Corps service—primarily former volunteers but also nine former staff members (two of whom were also former volunteers). The two main categories are nonfiction (70 percent) and fiction (30 percent). The nonfiction authors include anthropologists, biologists, conservationists, political and social scientists, professors, and even a few politicians and former ambassadors. Although “the Peace Corps experience” is a core component of this annotated bibliography, the niche category of memoirs accounts for less than a quarter of the cited 284 books. In the fiction category, only about 15 percent of the 284 books may reflect the Peace Corps experience; they include 31 novels and 10 collections of short stories. (Children’s books are included in a separate bibliography.)

Whatever the subject, these books are representative of the creativity, scholarship, and knowledge of the developing world of authors with Peace Corps service. As such, they attest to the formative influence that Peace Corps service in 83 countries in the developing world had on the authors. Of the 233 authors/editors cited in this bibliography, only about a quarter are female; they authored mostly memoirs, novels, and short stories. In addition to those categories, the male authors also wrote numerous general works of nonfiction.

This selected bibliography attempts to be representative of authors with Peace Corps service whose books are in the Library of Congress collections. In addition to more than 550 books searchable using the “Peace Corps” keyword, these collections include many other books authored by returned Peace Corps volunteers or former staff members. (A few titles marked with an asterisk (*) are currently unavailable.) This bibliography does not reflect any official endorsement or policy position by the Library of Congress or the U.S. government in general; the bibliographer alone was responsible for compiling it.

The citations are listed alphabetically and in accordance with the Chicago Manual of Style (16th ed.). Country and years of Peace Corps service in parentheses follow the initial reference to an author. The sources for the Peace Corps service information are the “Bibliography of Books by Peace Corps Writers” of PeaceCorpswriters.org, and the National Peace Corps Association’s Directory of the Peace Corps Community (2006). Each book cited also has a Library of Congress Control Number (LCCN) Permalink, which takes the reader to the Library’s complete bibliographic metadata for the book. Unless the subject of the book is evident by its title, a brief annotation, usually provided by the publisher, follows the citation.
“We are torchbearers of a vital tradition—that of shedding light in the mythical heart of darkness.”

—Novelist Bob Shacochis (Eastern Caribbean, 1975–76)1

Publisher’s summary: An anthology of stories about the work of Peace Corps volunteers in Latin America, ranging “from overland journeys to the Amazon Basin, into a village in Honduras terrorized by insurgent forces, and to the ball fields of Ecuador for an unusual game of béisbol.”

Publisher’s description: “The national bestseller—over two million copies sold. A shocking, inspirational bestseller, Nurse is the story of eight weeks in the life of a nurse in a large urban hospital. It is all here: the joy and pain, the death and drama, the mistakes, successes, and secrets. Nurse reads like a novel, but sticks in the memory like real experience—because it is.”

Publisher’s summary: “An account of the five-month nightmare of five Costa Rican fishermen, who survived against almost insurmountable odds and were rescued at sea after a journey of 4,500 miles.”

Subject: This is a biography of the author’s parents, particularly his father, Armando, who was a prisoner of war in Korea. It is also a memoir of the author’s development as a writer, from a chance encounter with Hemingway in Pamplona to a course in English literature in Argentina taught by Jorge Luis Borges.

Publisher’s description: “The Shattered Pearl is an account of the ten years the author spent in Uganda. It begins with an inside look at Peace Corps training in 1966 against the backdrop of the civil rights movement. Sara finds herself the only black Peace Corps trainee in a group of 150. Once in Uganda, Sara teaches science and math and travels around East Africa with her Peace Corps friends observing the natural beauty and abundant wildlife in the game parks. They even attempt to climb Mt. Kilimanjaro. In April 1968, Sara marries a Ugandan, James Wanambwa; resigns from the Peace Corps and begins a new life. Their son Edward is born in 1970. James is trying to start a dairy farm and Sara is still teaching. On January 25, 1971, Idi Amin Dada overthrows the government of Milton Obote and plunges Uganda into a cycle of terror and bloodshed. Even the birth of their daughter, Lillian, in 1972 only temporarily distracts Sara and James from the tragedy that is unfolding. During the next five years, the situation worsens. Sara moves about the country freely, seeing many things that are not reported in the press. She lives as an ordinary Ugandan but sees the events from an American viewpoint, including the Israeli raid on Entebbe Airport. Finally, in 1977, Sara and James decide that they must leave Uganda if they are to retain their sanity and give their children a chance for a normal life. They go through the harrowing process of getting permission to leave the country, procuring travel documents, and finally are forced to leave overland when the airport becomes too dangerous to use. They arrive safely in the USA, tired, relieved and saddened to have witnessed the shattering of the Pearl of Africa.”

Publisher’s description: “The dusty files of a venerable dictionary publisher...a hidden cache of coded clues...a story written by a phantom author...an unsolved murder in a gritty urban park—all collide memorably in Emily Arsenault’s magnificent debut, at once a teasing literary puzzle, an ingenious suspense novel, and an exploration of definitions: of words, of who we are, and of the stories we choose to define us. In the maze of cubicles at Samuelson Company, editors toil away in silence, studying the English language, poring over new expressions and freshly coined words—all in preparation for the next new edition of the Samuelson Dictionary. ...Mona has just made a startling discovery: a trove of puzzling citations, all taken from the same book, *The Broken Teaglass. … Charged with wit and intelligence, set against a sweetly cautious love story, The Broken Teaglass is a tale that will delight lovers of words, lovers of mysteries, and fans of smart, funny, brilliantly inventive fiction.”

Publisher’s description: “In this candid guide, experienced Peace Corps volunteers give the complete lowdown on all anyone needs to know before applying and volunteering, examining everything from the highly competitive application process to living like a local to Peace Corps rules and policy. The only handbook of its kind, this pragmatic manual provides answers that cannot be found anywhere else. Containing the latest information and resources on Peace Corps programs, this is an essential reference for anyone contemplating the ‘toughest job you’ll ever love.’”

- Silver Award in the Travel Division, 2011 Independent Publisher Book Awards

Summary: The first of a series of four anthologies celebrating and recording Peace Corps volunteers’ accomplishments and anecdotes, this one is devoted to volunteers in Africa.

Publisher’s description: “The Road to Makokota is set in a war-torn former British colony in present-day West Africa. Craig Allan Hammond, a black American, returns to Africa to find his former love, Oussumatu Turay, and her son—his son—Abu. Sixteen years earlier, Hammond left Oussu and Abu in Makokota after completing a road-building project; she was nineteen when he left, and his son only a few weeks old. He has not seen them since. Now the country is decimated by a civil war. Wracked by guilt and fear, Hammond needs to find mother and son and bring them out of the killing zone to safety—in order to save himself. Hammond scours refugee camps in the French-speaking country across the border from Makokota. Having no success, he journeys with a Polish nurse deep into the ravaged land and its violent and dismal reality. Before his journey is over, he will learn that you can’t find anything until you’ve lost everything.”

- Peace Corps Writers Best Travel Writing Award winner, 2004
Publisher’s description: “In 1960, the Aral Sea was the size of Lake Michigan: a huge body of water in the deserts of Central Asia. By 1996, when Tom Bissell arrived in Uzbekistan as a naïve Peace Corps volunteer, disastrous Soviet irrigation policies had shrunk the sea to a third its size. Bissell lasted only a few months before complications forced him to return home, but he had already become obsessed with this beautiful, brutal land. Five years later, Bissell convinces a magazine to send him to Central Asia to investigate the Aral Sea’s destruction. There, he joins forces with a high-spirited young Uzbek named Rustam, and together they make their often-wild way through the ancient cities—Tashkent, Samarkand, Bukhara—of this fascinating but often misunderstood part of the world. Slipping more than once through the clutches of the Uzbek police, who suspect them of crimes ranging from Christian evangelism to heroin smuggling, the two young men develop an unlikely friendship as they journey to the shores of the devastated sea. …Sometimes hilarious, sometimes powerfully sobering, Chasing the Sea is a gripping portrait of an unfamiliar land and the debut of a gifted young writer.”

Publisher’s description: “In April 1975, as Saigon fell to the North Vietnamese Army, John Bissell, a former Marine officer living in the Upper Peninsula of Michigan, was glued to his television. Struggling to save his marriage, raise his sons, and live with his memories of the war in Vietnam, Bissell found himself racked with anguish and horror as his country abandoned a cause for which so many of his friends had died. Opening with a gripping account of the chaotic and brutal last month of the war, The Father of All Things is Tom Bissell’s powerful reckoning with the Vietnam War and its impact on his father, his country, and Vietnam itself. Through him, we learn what it was like to grow up with a gruff but oddly tender veteran father who would wake his children in the middle of the night when the memories got too painful. Bissell also explores the many debates about the war, from whether it was winnable to Ho Chi Minh’s motivations to why America’s leaders lied so often. Above all, he shows how the war has continued to influence American views on foreign policy more than thirty years later. At the heart of this book is John and Tom Bissell’s unforgettable journey back to Vietnam. As they travel the country and talk to Vietnamese veterans, we relive the war as John Bissell experienced it, visit the site of his near-fatal wounding, and hear him explain how Vietnam shaped him and so many of his generation.”

Publisher’s biographical note: “Casting caution to the wind at the age of fifty, New York caterer and food writer Bonnie Lee Black decided to close her catering business and join the Peace Corps. Posted to the tiny town of Lastoursville in the thickly rain-forested interior of Gabon, Central Africa, Bonnie taught health, nutrition, and cooking, in French, primarily to local African women and children.”

Summary: A novel of war in the Pacific in 1941, beginning at Pearl Harbor, as told by four friends, one of whom becomes Tokyo Rose.

Babel’s Dawn is a saga covering six million years. Like a walk through a natural history museum, Bolles demonstrates how members of the human lineage came to speak. Beginning with a scene of the last common ancestor ignoring a bird as it flies by, he guides us through generations, illuminating how it became possible for two Homo sapiens to not only acknowledge the songbird, but to also discuss the meaning of its song. Tracing the rise of voluntary vocalizations as well as the first word, phrases, and sentences, Bolles works against the common belief that the reason apes cannot speak is they are not smart enough. In this groundbreaking work, Bolles proposes that we now have substantial evidence that this age-old idea can no longer stand. With concrete portrayals of living individuals interwoven with evidence, data, and theory, Babel’s Dawn is a powerful account of a great scientific revolution.”

Publisher’s synopsis: “Quantum mechanics was perhaps the single greatest scientific discovery of twentieth-century physics. But the man who was arguably the greatest physicist of them all, Albert Einstein, struggled with the theory, seeking a more complete explanation of the physical phenomena that scientists were observing. Einstein’s reluctance to embrace the quantum ultimately pitted him against another great genius of the era, Niels Bohr, a pragmatist who readily accepted a theory that allowed for unpredictability. Einstein stubbornly insisted on a deeper understanding. This contest of visions ripped through the scientific community, giving rise to one of the most impassioned debates of modern physics.”

Publisher’s description: “Fifty years after President Kennedy signed the 1961 Executive Order creating the Peace Corps, nearly 100 former volunteers who joined the new organization in the first year for service in the Philippines recall why they joined, what they experienced, and how this service in the Philippines affected their lives. …The Peace Corps program in the Philippines was the first in Asia. Three factors set it apart from others during the early years of the Peace Corps’ existence. First, it was the largest program in the world, absorbing 25 per cent of all volunteers at the beginning. Second, all volunteers in the first years were assigned to be “teacher’s aides,” a position that was never clearly defined and that the Country Director later admitted was a “non-job.” And third, the Philippine program occurred in a nation that only fifteen years earlier had become independent from the United States…. This history gave the Philippine program a distinctly different political and social dynamic from what was the case in all of the other early Peace Corps countries…. The stories illustrate varying degrees of integration into the local culture, different ways of coping with the frustrations of their “non-job,” and what many learned as they came to terms with themselves living far from familiar comforts on a salary of about $55 per month. Above all the stories tell of the determination and spirit of these early volunteers in establishing a strong basis for one of the important first Peace Corps programs.”

Publisher’s description: “Daniel B. Botkin, the coauthor of one of the most widely adopted textbooks on environmental science, uses this narrative of his adventures to illuminate the complex and ever-changing relationship between human beings and their environment.”

❖ Winner of the 1998 Iowa Short Fiction Award

Summary: This is a collection of short stories based on the daily lives of Guatemalans.

❖ Winner of the 2001 Maria Thomas Fiction Award presented by Peace Corps Writers

Subject: This is a tragicomedy set in Guatemala. Carlton James, an American ex-pat pickpocket and swindler, targets tourists visiting Panajachel. As a gringo, he escapes suspicion, at least until a detective-turned-farmer teams up with a local Peace Corps volunteer and solves the case. However, James and his female Indian accomplice resist arrest, with tragic consequences.

Summary: Two older married volunteers “describe their training, experiences, and afterthoughts of two years of community development and teaching for the Peace Corps in a coastal fishing town of Ecuador.”

Publisher’s description: “After meeting John, her [Peace Corps] recruiter, Eve embarks on a journey that leads her from New York to Ecuador to Uganda. She is both gung-ho and hesitant about each step, thinking about what she might be leaving behind by leaving the comfort of the United States for a poor town in Ecuador or a part of Uganda that U.S. officials are not even allowed to enter because of the danger. … In the process, she sheds light on important social causes and dangerous situations and introduces us to a few of the people who are working to make the world a better place…. First Comes Love, Then Comes Malaria is a memoir about love, perseverance, sacrifice, hard work, and the fact that a few dedicated people really can make a difference.”

Publisher’s description: “In the weeks immediately following September 11, Kevin Bubriski made four pilgrimages to the World Trade Center site from his home in Vermont to witness and record the impact of the tragedy. Like so many who had experienced the events from a distance, Bubriski was driven to visit Ground Zero in an attempt to come to terms with the horrifying scenes reported on television and in the papers. At the barricades surrounding the site, Bubriski found people experiencing not only a remarkable sense of community, but also the deepest kind of personal reflection on loss and mortality.”

Publisher’s description: “Familiar with Nepal from living and working in remote villages there, Bubriski returned in 1984 and produced this in-depth portrait of a people and culture quickly changing in the face of modern intrusions.”

Publisher’s description: “In this compelling narrative, Michael L. Buckler draws readers into the challenging, yet rewarding world of the Peace Corps. Inspired by his journals, the book recounts his life as a Peace Corps teacher after a heartbreaking divorce and a demanding legal career prompted him to make a change. Assigned to a village school in Malawi, Buckler opens his tiny home to three boys, embarking with them on a journey of cross-cultural discovery, personal sacrifice, and transformative growth. Determined to help his village, Buckler collaborates with community leaders to build a boarding school for girls. As momentum builds, a powerful bureaucrat tries to shut down the project and Buckler becomes discouraged. As he agonizes over whether to leave, the village takes matters into its own hands in a moving display of the persistent, courageous spirit of Malawi.”

Subject: This is a fictional story of a Peace Corps volunteer who struggles “to gain the trust of a tough group of juvenile delinquents and the guards and administration of a detention facility in Colombia.”

- Peace Corps Writers Paul Cowan Nonfiction Award winner, 2003

Subject: As a Peace Corps volunteer, Jason Carter, the grandson of former president Jimmy Carter, spent two years with a rural family in a former black homeland near the Swaziland border. Power Lines is the author’s story of a community’s quest to dissolve deep racial barriers.

Subject: At the age of 68, Lillian Carter (1898–1983), the mother of former President Jimmy Carter, joined the Peace Corps and served in India.

Publisher’s summary: A Viking Voyage is the author’s account of how he reenacted Leif Eriksson’s voyage a thousand years ago from Greenland to North America to fulfill a childhood obsession.

Publisher’s description: “In 1988 the author was assigned to serve in the Peace Corps as a nutritionist in a health center in southeastern Guatemala. In her field of home economics and education, she started women’s groups, taught public health in local schools, and worked at the health center with Guatemalan medical interns and with a nurse, especially weighing and measuring babies. Since her name Marjorie could not be translated into Spanish, everyone called her Margarita. In her two years of living and working in the small, poverty-stricken village of Llano Grande, she felt totally accepted because of the wonderful people.”

Publisher’s description: “Bread, Salt & Plum Brandy is an insightful and eye-opening account of Lisa Fisher Cazacu’s odyssey as a Peace Corps volunteer in post-communist Romania. With humor and pathos, Lisa shares her experiences, and her relationship with a charming young lawyer from Bucharest, who experienced first-hand the horrors of Nicolae Ceausescu’s reign of terror. Often humorous, sometimes heartbreaking, this collection of observations and experiences offers a unique insight into the journey of a Peace Corps volunteer, and the indomitable spirit of the Romanian people.”

Summary: The Punishment of Virtue is the author’s account of her four years in Afghanistan, first as a National Public Radio reporter covering the Taliban in 2002 and then as a manager of a nonprofit founded by President Hamid Karzai’s warlord brother.

Publisher’s description: “In the tradition of Paul Theroux, Peter Chilson’s fiction debut delivers a fascinating, heart-wrenching view of modern African culture, filtered through the lens of the West. The collection explores the experiences of Americans struggling to cope with life in Africa, and of Africans acclimating to life in the United States. In a novella and four short stories, Chilson uses a phrase borrowed from biology to point out how our “disturbance-loving species” thrives in the most chaotic, seemingly uninhabitable situations. In the opening novella, an idealistic young college graduate teaching in Niger witnesses his colleague’s abduction by soldiers at gunpoint. “American Food,” winner of the Gulf Coast Prize for fiction, finds a West African professor trying to preserve his culinary customs while living in a small Oregon town.”

Subject: This nonfiction travel memoir focuses on Niger, a country without railroads or domestic airlines, where the roads are the only lifeline.

Author’s summary: According to the author, Henry David Thoreau (1817–62) made more than 165 professional surveys that “resolved ownership disputes, aided in the laying out of Concord’s roads, regularized notoriously erratic property lines in Middlesex County, and plotted off large stretches of woodland for sale and cutting.” One of Thoreau’s last surveys was of the Concord River where he “took literally thousands of river soundings, sometimes returning to the same spot hourly to check on barely measurable fluctuations of the water level.”

Publisher’s summary: “Marialena Morales, a young college student, becomes a CIA agent after September 11, 2001, and is assigned to Venezuela, where she happens upon the ambush of two U.S. senators.” Unknown adversaries have assassinated one senator and kidnapped the other, who is Joe LaCarta, the novel’s protagonist. The plot of this mystery/suspense novel unfolds along Venezuela’s mysterious Río Orinoco.

Publisher’s description: Ask Not is a detailed account of the week leading up to JFK’s inaugural speech that provided inspiration for the Peace Corps.” [“And so, my fellow Americans, ask not what your country can do for you; ask what you can do for your country.”]

Subject: The author recounts his island-hopping around the oceans of the world from Más a Tierra [Isla Juan Fernández] (Daniel Defoe’s inspiration for Robinson Crusoe) to Jura in the Hebrides, where George Orwell wrote 1984.

Summary: Following in the footsteps of Mark Twain, the author recounts his travels through the equatorial countries of French Guiana, Brazil, Ecuador, Gabon, Zaire (present-day Democratic Republic of the Congo), Sumatra, Borneo, Christmas Island (Kiritimati), and Abermama.

Subject: “Volume I emphasizes speaking and understanding, and Volume 2 focuses on the written language.”

Subject: “The author traces (and photographs) each step of the Mount Everest expedition of David Breashears, the first American to scale Everest twice.”

Summary: While living in teaching school in a farming village on the edge of Nepal’s Himalayan Mountains in 1973, Coburn developed a unique friendship with a septuagenarian native widow named Vishnu Maya Gurung. Illustrated with his own photos, Nepali Aama is Coburn’s account of his experiences living, working, and traveling with Aama.

Subject: After describing his experience working in the Black ghetto in the first half of his book, the author recounts his experience as a Peace Corps volunteer in Ecuador.

Publisher’s description: “The author recounts her life as a Peace Corps volunteer in Ecuador, and other related experiences, describing how she changed from being a naive believer in United States foreign policy to a critic of it.”

Publisher’s description: “Bruce Cumings traces the growth of Korea from a string of competing walled city-states to its present dual nationhood. He examines the ways in which Korean culture has been influenced by Japan and China, and the ways in which it has subtly influenced its more powerful neighbors. Cumings also considers the recent changes in the South, where authoritarianism is giving way to democracy, and in the North, which Cumings depicts as a “socialist corporatist” state more like a neo-Confucian kingdom than a Stalinist regime. Korea’s Place in the Sun does much to help Western readers understand the complexities of Korea’s past and present.”

Publisher’s description: “An assassin decapitates a U.S. congressman in American Samoa then enters independent Samoa for other targets. Polynesian beauty Pua, the sole agent of the Samoan Secret Service, must protect their national leader—her grandfather. With an anti-colonial chip on her shoulder and a black belt to back it up, she faces Ken, a down-on-his-luck CIA agent. They close in on each other and the warrior-assassin as they race to discover Robert Louis Stevenson’s secret. It leads to evidence that could reignite civil war, which a shadowy chief tries to do.”

Publisher’s description: “Inspired by the leaders, causes, and music of his youth, Chic Dambach set out to change the world. This is the fascinating life story of a ’60s antiwar and free speech leader who remained true to his values and helped build a more peaceful world. Along the way, he witnessed the torture of a black football teammate, he led a strike for his Peace Corps training group, his best friend and mentor was murdered, he donated a kidney to save his son’s life, faced financial ruin, helped end two major wars in Africa, and created the first Global Symposium of Peaceful Nations. Exhaust the Limits is a compelling adventure story and road map for idealists young and old.”

Peace Corps Writers Maria Thomas Fiction Award winner, 2002

Publisher’s description: “Field Observations, the debut fiction collection from Rob Davidson, contains stories about people who find themselves at difficult turning points in their lives—times when they are faced with hard choices, broken promises, and the fear of self-destruction. Davidson’s characters are diverse: a retired math teacher, an auto[mobile] repair worker, a technical writer, a nurse living overseas. What connects them is the way Davidson renders each character with essential human dignity, regardless of his or her flaws. This collection addresses such contemporary concerns as love relationships, cultural interaction, divorce, aging, and alcoholism in a lively, sometimes offbeat way. … “A Private Life” renders a young Peace Corps volunteer grappling with her loneliness in a foreign country, with a sense of exposure and violation. … Rendered in clean, smooth prose with sharply observed details and driven by Davidson’s fine ear for dialogue, these stories poignantly capture the difficult in-between states that trouble people every day. Fully defined and evocatively written, this collection addresses important real-life issues and concerns.”

Publisher’s description: “At 23, Matt Davis moved to a remote Mongolian town to teach English. What he found when he arrived was a town—and a country—undergoing wholesale change from a traditional, countryside existence to a more urban, modern identity. When Things Get Dark documents these changes through the Mongolians Matt meets, but also focuses on the author’s downward spiral into alcohol abuse and violence—a scenario he saw played out by many of the Mongolian men around him. Matt’s self-destruction culminates in a drunken fight with three men that forces him to a hospital to have his kidneys X-rayed. He hits bottom in that cold hospital room, his body naked and shivering, a bloodied Mongolian man staring at him from an open door, the irrational thought in his head that maybe he is going to die there. His personal struggles are balanced with insightful descriptions of customs and interactions, and interlaced with essays on Mongolian history and culture that make for a fascinating glimpse of a mysterious place and people.”

Publisher’s description: “Who are these people, the powerful officials who operate in the shadow of the Oval Office, often out of public view and accountable only to the presidents who put them there? Some remain obscure even to this day. But quite a number have names that resonate far beyond the foreign policy elite: McGeorge Bundy, Henry Kissinger, Zbigniew Brzezinski, Colin Powell, Condoleezza Rice. Ivo Daalder and Mac Destler provide the first inside look at how presidents from John F. Kennedy to George W. Bush have used their national security advisers to manage America’s engagements with the outside world. They paint vivid portraits of the fourteen men and one woman who have occupied the coveted office in the West Wing, detailing their very different personalities, their relations with their presidents, and their policy successes and failures.”

Subject: This is a former Peace Corps volunteer’s account of his experience cycling in the Kalahari Desert.

❖ Winner of the 1998 Paul Cowan Nonfiction Award given by Peace Corps Writers

Publisher’s description: “The Last Camel is a collection of stories about the people who live in a little village in Northern Somalia. These are compelling tales about African spirits, clever women, untouchable Midgaans, sagacious elders who struggle with modern technology, bandits, and a few goats. The stories are embellished; each one illustrates a special aspect of Somali culture. The tales are told by a young American Peace Corps teacher who lived alone in the village of Arbsiyo in Northern Somalia in the late 60s. The village had no electricity, no telephone, no reliable water supply, and little food. The Somali villagers who were born in Arbsiyo, and the American who came to live among them, struggled mightily to understand each other and the changing world about them. The book reveals the complex hearts and minds of the Somali people because it was written by a young woman who slept among the camels, spoke the language, starved, smiled, and savored life in Africa.”

Note: This is the first of the author’s half-dozen novels published during 1969–86, all of which are in the Library of Congress collection.

Publisher’s description: “Sharon Dirlam and John McCafferty were Peace Corps volunteers in Birobidjan, capital of the Jewish Autonomous Region of Russia, a place that was cut off from foreigners for most of the twentieth century. The Russians they came to know, their relationships with these two Americans and with each other, and the passions and intrigues of the people around them are the heart of this true story.”

Summary: Former Sen. Christopher J. Dodd’s account of his father’s service as a staff lawyer in the Nuremberg trial for crimes against humanity draws on Thomas J. Dodd’s nightly letters to his wife, Grace.

❖ National Book Award Finalist

Publisher’s description: “When Peace Corps volunteer Michael Killigan goes missing in West Africa [Sierra Leone], his father Randall and his best friend Boone Westfall begin separate quests to find him. Randall, a bankruptcy lawyer, is the warlord of his world, a shark in a fishbowl, exercising power with mad, relentless, hilarious glee; Boone, an American innocent abroad, journeys to the African bush, protected by the twin charms of the passport and the almighty dollar. In seeking Michael, both men find much more than they bargain for.”

Publisher’s description: “Francisco D’Sai is a firstborn son of a firstborn son—all the way back to the beginning of a long line of proud Konkans. Known as the “Jews of India,” the Konkans kneeled before the Portuguese explorer Vasco da Gama’s sword and before Saint Francis Xavier’s cross, abandoned their Hindu traditions, and became Catholics. In 1973, Francisco’s Konkan father, Lawrence, and American mother, Denise, move to Chicago, where Francisco is born. His father, who does his best to assimilate into American culture, drinks a lot and speaks little. But his mother, who served in the Peace Corps in India, and his uncle, Sam (aka Samuel Erasmus D’Sai), are passionate raconteurs who do their best to preserve the family’s Konkan heritage. Friends, allies, and eventually lovers, Sam and Denise feed Francisco’s imagination with proud visions of India and Konkan history.” The author loosely based his novel on his mother’s Peace Corps service in India (1969–70).

- Sue Kaufman Prize for First Fiction from the American Academy of Arts and Letters
- Los Angeles Times Book Prize finalist for First Fiction

Publisher’s summary: “Whiteman is the author’s debut novel about a maverick American relief worker caught in a violent conflict in an Ivory Coast village, which he refuses to abandon despite the cut-off of his funding.” It is also about a white man’s assimilation into Ivorian village culture.

- Milkweed National Fiction Prize, 1989

Publisher’s note: “Stories deal with the interaction between native Africans and American diplomats, volunteer workers, and missionaries.”

Publisher’s summary: “Focusing his study on one powerful clan of Korean businessmen, Eckert examines the extent to which Japanese imperialism molded modern Korean capitalism.”

Subject: This book is about Nicaraguan politics and government during 1979–90 and more specifically about the struggle for press freedom by the Chamorro family, which owned the La Prensa newspaper.

- Winner of the Maria Thomas Fiction Award, 2000

Publisher’s description: “In a tale that combines the clash of cultures, the lure of the exotic, and the brutal reality of a refugee’s life into a memorable human comedy, we come to understand what it means to be an American. The saviors of this witty novel set in a Vietnamese refugee camp are a pair of Americans who find themselves fomenting rebellion.”

- Winner of the Peace Corps Writers Paul Cowan Nonfiction Award, 2004

Publisher’s description: The author, a longtime Peace Corps worker based in Washington, D.C., paints “a portrait of a resilient African village, ruled until recently by magic and tradition, now facing modern problems and responding, often triumphantly, to change. As a Peace Corps volunteer, the author was the first Caucasian to venture to Nambonkaha since the French colonialists… Lyrical and topical, Erdman’s beautiful debut captures the astonishing spirit of an unforgettable community.”

Publisher’s description: The author “traces the trajectory of contemporary Sherpa society reeling under the impact of modern education and mass tourism, and assesses the Sherpa’s concerns for their future and how they believe these problems should be and eventually will be resolved.”

Publisher’s description: “Robert Frank’s Microeconomics and Behavior covers the essential topics of microeconomics while exploring the relationship between economics analysis and human behavior. The book’s clear narrative appeals to students, and its numerous examples help students develop economic intuition. This book introduces modern topics not often found in intermediate textbooks. Its focus throughout is to develop a student’s capacity to ‘think like an economist.’”

Publisher’s summary: “Presents the story of each of 20 key settlement areas throughout Ireland is told. Illustrated with contemporary photographs as well as historical maps and drawings, this book explores an aspect of Ireland’s history and heritage. It profiles towns and cities including Athenry, Athlone, Carlingford, Carrickfergus, Cashel, Clonmel, Cork, and Derry.”

Publisher’s summary: “It’s Japan. The last decade of the seventeenth century. Men who lived by the sword find themselves without a vocation while women begin to confront new opportunities and threats hitherto unimaginable. This title includes the stories that portray this colourful but remote world.”

Publisher’s description: “Lawrence Grobel is the author of well-received biographies of Truman Capote, Marlon Brando, James Michener, and the Huston family…. Now, in The Art of the Interview, he offers step-by-step instruction on all aspects of nailing an effective interview...from research and question writing to final editing....”

Publisher’s description: “The year was 1971...The Russian hadn’t invaded and the Taliban didn’t exist. Eloise Hanner now takes us back to a simpler time and shares her story as a young teacher, living in Afghanistan as an American Peace Corps volunteer. Her letters to her mother bring to life the challenges she and her husband faced living as young volunteers and let us experience for ourselves the people and the customs of Afghanistan.”

Publisher’s description: “For two years, Thor Hanson lived in a remote village on the edge of Bwindi Impenetrable Forest where he worked with the local trackers to save one of the world’s most magnificent endangered species, the mountain gorilla. He survived the local moonshine, baboons stealing his vegetables and army ants attacking in his sleep with grace and good humor. In The Impenetrable Forest, Thor offers an unforgettable glimpse into the world of mountain gorillas and the African cultures that surround them.” Hanson is also author of Feathers: The Evolution of a Natural Miracle (New York: Basic Books, 2011).

Recipient of the John Dos Passos Prize for Literature

Publisher’s description: “The interwoven lives of a community in Colorado. The characters include two cattle farmers who take in a girl, thrown out of her house for becoming pregnant. The novel describes the girl’s impact on their lives, both men being bachelors.”

Subject: This is historical fiction involving Americans and the Peace Corps in Chile during the military regime of 1973–88.

Winner of the 2000 Paul Cowan Nonfiction Award given by Peace Corps Writers

Publisher’s description: “When the Peace Corps sends Susana Herrera to teach English in northern Cameroon, she yearns to embrace her adopted village and its people…and to forget a bitter childhood and painful past. To the villagers, however, she is a rich American tourist, a nasara (white person) who has never known pain or want. They stare at her in silence…. Gradually, Susana and the village become part of each other. They will never be the same again.”

Publisher’s description: “Records the author’s experiences as a Peace Corps English teacher in the small Chinese city of Fuling, during which time he witnessed such events as the death of Deng Xiaoping, the return of Hong Kong to the mainland, and the construction of the Three Gorges Dam.”

Publisher’s description: “In this penetrating narrative account, Hessler investigates China’s lurch into modernity as he survives the advent of the nation’s uniquely terrifying car culture, probes the transformation of village life, and explores China’s frantic industrialization.”

Publisher’s description: “Set in the exotic and turbulent world of Syria in the 1930s, Night Falls on Damascus tells the story of a French-Syrian police inspector, Nikolai Faroun, caught up in a complex murder investigation of a beautiful and controversial woman from a prominent Damascus family…. A gripping murder mystery, Night Falls on Damascus richly evokes a time and place where the deadly conflict between modernism and tradition in the Middle East first came into play.”

Summary: This is a memoir of a Peace Corps volunteer in Guatemala named Ellen Urbani. Although a privileged Southerner, she has the fortitude to persevere in the face of daunting challenges.

Subject: This is a Peace Corps teacher’s account of her encounter with Nigerian social life and customs and the Hausa tribe in the village of Katsina.

Publisher’s description: “I Am the Grand Canyon is the story of the Havasupai people. From their origins among the first group of Indians to arrive in North America some 20,000 years ago to their epic struggle to regain traditional lands taken from them in the nineteenth century, the Havasupai have a long and colorful history. The story of this tiny tribe once confined to a too small reservation depicts a people with deep cultural ties to the land, both on their former reservation below the rim of the Grand Canyon and on the surrounding plateaus.”

Publisher’s description: “To End a War” is a brilliant portrayal of high-wire, high-stakes diplomacy in one of the toughest negotiations of modern times. A classic account of the uses and misuses of American power, its lessons go far beyond the boundaries of the Balkans and provide a powerful argument for continued American leadership in the modern world.”

Summary: This is a memoir about a white volunteer assigned to a remote village in Mali to assist a midwife, Monique. Together they make changes in how African women are treated.

❖ National Magazine Award finalist
Publisher’s description: “...Christopher Howard’s debut novel, Tea of Ulaanbaatar: the story of disaffected Peace Corps volunteer Warren, who flees life in late-capitalist America to find himself stationed in the post-Soviet industrial hell of urban Mongolia. As the American presence crumbles, Warren seeks escape in tsus, the mysterious “blood tea” that may be the final revenge of the defeated Khans—or that may be only a powerful hallucinogen operating on an uneasy mind—as a phantasmagoria of violence slowly envelops him. With prose that combines Benjamin Kunkel’s satiric bite, William Burroughs’s dark historical reimagining, and a lush literary beauty all his own, Christopher Howard in Tea of Ulaanbaatar unfolds a story of expatriate angst, the dark side of globalization, and middle-class nightmares—and announces himself as one of the most inventive and ambitious of the new generation of American novelists.”

Publisher’s description: “Faced with a growing crisis of military insecurity, some African states have actually collapsed while others are threatened by ongoing insurgencies. This original work examines three potential options for increasing state security in contemporary Africa: regional military groupings, private security companies, and a continent-wide, professional peacekeeping force.”

Summary: This is a third reprint of the author’s September 1999 Library of Congress (Federal Research Division) study entitled “The Sociology and Psychology of Terrorism: Who Becomes a Terrorist and Why?” In developing profiles of a dozen terrorist groups, the author surveyed three decades’ worth of books in the Library’s collection relating to the subject. Contradicting the stereotype of the psychopathic terrorist, the study highlighted an apparent consensus among psychologists that a dominant characteristic of terrorists is their normality, despite their extreme alienation from society. In his predictive section on “New Forms of Terrorist Threat Scenarios,” the author based his key scenario on a version of a future plot option masterminded by Ramzi Yousef and Khalid Sheikh Mohammed and reported in 1995. Osama Bin Laden implemented this plot on September 11, 2001, as the Planes Operation. Although the World Trade Center scenario was edited out of the author’s initial draft as “too sensational,” his watered-down Washington-area scenario still provided the only open-source forewarning of the 9/11 plot. News media began widely citing the study on May 16, 2002—a few hours after the national security adviser claimed that nobody could have predicted that terrorists would “slam” airplanes into the World Trade Center and the Pentagon.

Publisher’s description: “The Henderson Memories is a story of idealism and loss, of passions felt and lessons learned. In 1965, two young American Peace Corps Volunteers arrived at a small town in the Brazilian state of Bahia. Kyle and Jolene Henderson were determined to confront the poverty and social inequality surrounding them, but a few months later the Hendersons suddenly left Brazil. They returned to the States, established careers, raised and family and eventually died, having never spoken to their children of Brazil or the Peace Corps. What happened to the Hendersons in Brazil? Daughter Connie Scheel thinks Clint Estergard knows the answers and she flies to Vancouver, B.C. hoping to get them. But Professor Estergard has a tale to tell, and he’s going to insist on telling it his way.”

Publisher’s description: “With explosive tension and masterful suspense, A Handful of Kings is a page-turning thriller about what really happens in the world of espionage, by an insider who has lived it. American diplomat Vicky Sorrell learns the hard way that all is fair in love—and espionage. A Handful of Kings, the latest novel by prolific author and former Foreign Service officer Mark Jacobs, follows Vicky’s fast-paced tour of duty—one where she must decide who the bad guys are, who is lying, and who just might be telling the dangerous truth. Vicky is changing her life. She is leaving the Foreign Service and her lover at the same time. But before she departs the U.S. embassy in Madrid for home, a well-known American writer shows up with a strange request. Vicky knows that what the writer wants from her is not necessarily what he is asking. But curiosity leads her to play along, and she is quickly drawn into the murky underground of terrorists and spies into which the writer himself has been reluctantly led. The track she takes is full of wrong turns. And at the end of the tunnel, it’s not light she sees but an unspeakable threat to people she loves. Recalling Graham Greene in The Comedians, Jacobs weaves an engrossing story that takes place over three continents and illuminates the unexpected ways people betray and defend one another and, ultimately, how they learn to love.”

- Winner of the Maria Thomas Fiction Award in 1998

Publisher’s summary: “Agnes, an American social worker, comes to Bolivia to look for her brother, who is a magician for a drug lord. Roger, a stranded American, offers to be her guide in return for help to leave the country, and the two fall in love. A tour of the drug world.”

Subject: This appears to be a memoir about Peace Corps service in Zaire (present-day Democratic Republic of the Congo) and social life and customs of the country.

Publisher’s description: “Born on Emancipation Day, 1863, to a sharecropping family of African and Indian blood, Elijah Yancy never lived as a slave, but his self-image as a free person is at war with his surroundings: Spartanburg, South Carolina, in the Reconstructed South. Exiled for his own survival as a teenager, Elijah walks west to the Nebraska plains and, like other rootless young African-American men of that era, joins up with the U.S. Cavalry.”

Publisher’s description: “Mother of four and a teacher of French for twenty years, author Kempers had an experience different from that of the majority of (Peace Corps) Volunteers. Her “totally positive” tour of duty also contrasts sharply with Joseph Conrad’s grim tale of the Congo, Heart of Darkness. Assigned to a teachers college to teach English and language teaching methods to mature students, she lived in a large city located at a relatively high altitude with consequent temperate climate. She enjoyed good health and many modern conveniences. This was not the situation of most volunteers, who lived in rural settlements helping villagers with agricultural, sanitary or domestic projects.”

Subject: This is a collection of 13 stories written by former Peace Corps volunteers and mostly based in Africa.

- RPCV Writers & Readers’ Paul Cowan Nonfiction Award, 1995

Subject: This is a Peace Corps teacher’s account of her travels in the Sahara from Liberia to Algeria with four other Peace Corps women.

Subject: This is the author’s memoir of her Peace Corps service in Botswana, where her American idealism clashed with the Botswanan way of life.

Subject: This is historical romance fiction set in Brazil. According to the publisher, Kincaid’s books “…often feature horses—along with dashing heroes and adventurous heroines who find each other through their love for horses.”

Publisher’s description: “Set in Central America and in Middle Tennessee, The Baker’s Boy gives us two intertwined stories: In the first, Tanner Johnson, nearing midlife, has left his pregnant wife and taken a job as a baker, working nights, trying to avoid a shadowy presence that haunts him from the past. In the second, Tanner relives his painful experiences as a Peace Corps volunteer in Belize, where he taught at a boys’ reform school nearly a quarter century ago. Haunted by the past, he struggles to find the courage to accept his role as a husband and prospective father.”

Subject: This is a memoir of a former Peace Corps volunteer in Ethiopia, who discusses his service and Ethiopian politics and government, 1974–91.

Summary: The author, one of the initial Peace Corps volunteers, describes the creation of the Peace Corps and the experiences of the first contingent of volunteer teachers serving in Ghana.

Subject: Quechua riddles in the Andean countries of Bolivia, Ecuador, and Peru, translated into Spanish.

Subject: Fiction related to rural and social conditions in Ecuador, Indians and blacks in Ecuador, popular stories in Ecuadorian literature, and Quechua literature and folklore.

.Executor’s description: “In 1967 the Peace Corps sent P. F. Kluge to paradise—or so the American possessions in Micronesia seemed. His assignment was as noble as it was adventurous: to help the people of those half-forgotten Pacific islands move from old to new, so that paradise would have prosperity and freedom as well as physical beauty. He immersed himself in the lives of the diverse peoples of the islands. He composed speeches for their leaders. He wrote a stirring manifesto that became the Preamble to the Constitution of Micronesia. He began a friendship with a man who would one day be president of Palau. And then, a generation later, P. F. Kluge went back…. The Edge of Paradise shows the impact and ironies of America’s presence in an undeveloped part of the world, how perhaps there’s no way ‘a big place can touch a little one without harming it.’”

Publisher’s description: “A collection of essays discussing the importance of power, ideas, and domestic structures in world politics. It discusses structured evaluation of U.S. domestic politics and foreign policy, international politics and sovereignty. It is suitable for scholars of international politics.”

Subject: The author examines the postwar history of the involvement of American corporations in developing countries from 1945 to 1989.

Publisher’s summary: “Set in West Africa at the end of the 1960s and across the border from the war in Biafra, this is an arresting novel of sexual obsession, self-deception, and self-discovery.”

Publisher’s description: “This book demonstrates how only a small number of African writers—like Chinua Achebe, Ben Okri, Nuruddin Farah, and Wole Soyinka—have become known outside of their own continent. It also details the enormous obstacles they face within Africa to get their work published, let alone to support themselves financially from their writing. Charles R. Larson combines writers’ own testimony, pen portraits of their lives, and factual investigation to explore the full dimensions of this problem.”

Subject: This is a biography of Joseph P. Kennedy (1888–1969), John F. Kennedy (1917–63), and the Kennedy family.

Publisher’s description: “Based on five years of research, and with unprecedented cooperation from Kennedy family and associates, Laurence Leamer paints startling, in-depth portraits of the mothers, wives, sisters, and daughters who struggled to build and maintain the Kennedy dynasty—from steerage on an immigrant vessel to the slums of Boston, from the court of St. James to the White House.”

Publisher’s description: “The legendary first Peace Corps Country director in Nepal focuses on Joseph P. Kennedy’s sons and grandsons in the years following the assassination of JFK, and provides an account of John F. Kennedy, Jr.’s life as remembered by ten of his closest friends.”

Wikipedia summary: “Peter Lefcourt’s experiences working behind the scenes in Hollywood have inspired much of his fiction. Actor William H. Macy adapted The Deal, one of Lefcourt’s numerous satirical novels, for the screen, and it debuted at the 2008 Sundance Film Festival. It is about a down-and-out movie producer whose leading man is kidnapped from the set during filming.”

Subject: This memoir is about the author’s first year serving as a Peace Corps volunteer in a rural upper-primary school in Tanzania.

Publisher’s summary: “An irreverent account of the author’s experiences as a Jewish-American Peace Corps volunteer serving in rural China describes his observations about the lives of China’s interior populations and their complex relationships with local traditions and the rapid changes of modernization.”

Publisher’s description: “Challenges both Americans and Iranians to end decades of mutually hostile mythmaking. This title outlines 14 principles to guide the American who finds himself in a negotiation-commercial, political, or other—with an Iranian counterpart. It is suitable for those interested in understanding US-Iranian history and relations.”

Publisher’s description: “Assumptions and Misunderstandings is a memoir based strictly on letters written family and friends between November 15, 1992, and February 1, 1994, about the first 15 months of my stint as a Peace Corps volunteer in Ukraine. The end of central planning, an annual inflation rate of 2000 percent, and reform that was “virtually nonexistent” made living there both incredibly difficult and fascinating.”

Subject: The plot of Richard Lipez’s debut mystery novel involves oil industries.

Subject: This is a Peace Corps volunteer’s anthropological study of her experience living in the Senegalese village of Walli Jalia, its fish culture, social life and customs, and the Fula tribe.

Publisher’s description: “The inspirational story of John Kizell celebrates the life of a West African enslaved as a boy and brought to South Carolina on the eve of the American Revolution. Fleeing his owner, Kizell served with the British military in the Revolutionary War, began a family in the Nova Scotian wilderness, then returned to his African homeland to help found a settlement for freed slaves in Sierra Leone. He spent decades battling European and African slave traders along the coast and urging his people to stop selling their own into foreign bondage. This in-depth biography—based in part on Kizell’s own writings—illuminates the links between South Carolina and West Africa during the Atlantic slave trade’s peak decades.”

Publisher’s description: “Special expanded edition of the 1978 Peace Corps classic. Reprinted to mark the Agency’s 40th anniversary.”

Publisher’s description: “The true story of a female soldier in Iraq who was awarded the Bronze Star—not for fighting, but for fighting to care. She is today’s Florence Nightingale. At age 56, Susan Luz was deployed to Iraq. By the time she returned home, she had helped save the lives of 30,000 wounded soldiers, contractors, Iraqi civilians, and detainees. But this was not the first time Luz responded to the call of duty: this is the inspirational story of a life dedicated to service and to the ideal of fighting for what truly matters. As a young woman, Luz served in the Peace Corps in Brazil, where she experienced the brutality of poverty and violence. As a public health nurse, she has worked in jails, psychiatric wards, and a violent inner city high school. But nothing prepared her for what she would see in Iraq. Working under constant fire, Luz routinely witnessed the most horrific effects of the war. Her dedication to her job earned her the Bronze Star in honor of her selflessness and the life-saving work she carried out under unfathomably difficult circumstances. Susan Luz is a true hero and her story will resonate in the hearts and minds of readers for generations to come.”

Publisher’s description: “In this book, David MacDougall, one of the leading ethnographic filmmakers and film scholars of his generation, builds upon the ideas from his widely praised Transcultural Cinema and argues for a new conception of how visual images create human knowledge in a world in which the value of seeing has often been eclipsed by words.”

Publisher’s description: “Rick Behringer is an outside contractor working for the CIA. By day, he provides communications security for small businesses and government offices. In the shadows, Rick’s a spy who is in a desperate struggle to take down a terrorist mastermind with the means to unleash hell on Earth.”

Publisher’s description: “CIA officer Paul Patterson races to track down Kareem, a former Afghan resistance fighter who has become an al-Qaeda and Taliban operative, in a novel about the search for terrorist mastermind Osama bin Laden in the months prior to September 11th…. [T]his gripping and fast-paced novel, written by the author praised by The New Yorker for capturing “the le Carré; manner,” inspired in part by The 9/11 Report, captures the world of the CIA and the terrorists with the intensity John le Carré; brought to the Cold War.”

Subject: The book is an expansion of the author’s Harvard University dissertation thesis.

Subject: The first 900 pages of this massive volume are divided into sections on Foundations; Poetry; Prose; Fiction; Drama; Commentary, Criticism, and Interpretation; and Popular and Peripheral Manifestations. It has an additional 440-page-long Appendix.

Publisher’s description: “Michael Maren has spent much of the last twenty years in Africa, first as an aid worker, later as a journalist…. He brings firsthand reports of African farmers, Western aid workers, and corrupt politicians from many countries, joined together in a vicious circle of self-interest. Above all, he heralds an important truth: humanitarian intervention and foreign aid activity is necessarily political. It gets hijacked by powerful charities and agricultural interests. It is cynically manipulated by local strongmen to control rebellious populations. And it is the last refuge of Western colonialism.”

Publisher’s description: “New York Times bestselling author Phillip Margolin is back, this time with a powerful tale of murder that snakes its way through Washington, D.C.’s halls of power, leading straight to the White House and the most powerful office on earth…. Executive Privilege, with its nonstop action, unforgettable characters, and edge-of-your-seat suspense, proves once again that Phillip Margolin…belongs in the top echelon of thriller writers.”

Publisher’s description: “Phillip Margolin has written fourteen New York Times bestsellers, including his latest novels Fugitive and Executive Privilege. Each displays a unique, compelling insider’s view of criminal behavior, which comes from his long career as a criminal defense attorney who has handled thirty murder cases.... Defense attorney Amanda Jaffe, the heroine of Wild Justice and Proof Positive, becomes entrapped in a case of international intrigue and murder that leads her deep into the past ... and into the crosshairs of a killer.”

Publisher’s description: “Sarah Woodruff, on death row in Oregon for murdering her lover, John Finley, has appealed her case to the Supreme Court just when a prominent justice resigns, leaving a vacancy. Then, for no apparent reason, another justice is mysteriously attacked. Dana Cutler—one of the heroes from Margolin’s bestselling Executive Privilege—is quietly called in to investigate. ... With nonstop action, Supreme Justice picks up where Executive Privilege left off, putting readers right back where they were-on the edge of their seats.”

Publisher’s description: “Under the Loving Care of the Fatherly Leader offers in-depth portraits of North Korea’s two ruthless and bizarrely Orwellian leaders, Kim Il-Sung and Kim Jong-II. Lifting North Korea’s curtain of self-imposed isolation, this book will take readers inside a society that, to a Westerner, will appear to be from another planet. Subsisting on a diet short on food grains and long on lies, North Koreans have been indoctrinated from birth to follow unquestioningly a father-son team of megalomaniacs.”

Publisher’s description: “In this vivid narrative history of scientific vision, courage, and adventure, Brad Matsen illuminates the dramatic achievements of [William] Beebe and [Otis] Barton against the backdrop of the great age of exploration, in a riveting tale of man and nature.”

Publisher’s description: “After rewriting history with their discovery of a Nazi U-boat off the coast of New Jersey, legendary divers John Chatterton and Richie Kohler decided to investigate the great enduring mystery of history’s most notorious shipwreck: Why did Titanic sink as quickly as it did? … Titanic’s Last Secrets is the never-before-told story of the Ship of Dreams, a contemporary adventure that solves a historical mystery.”

Publisher’s description: “In American, Matthews presents a portrait of a country that enters the world arena even today armed with an extremely potent weapon: the collective notions we carry of America at its best. We have saluted them in our popular culture, from the Great Gatsby to “Casablanca” to “Rocky,” and throughout our American history, from 1776 to 9/11. Matthews paints a picture of more than just a nation challenged but a people ready and eager to prevail.”

Publisher’s description: “Open The Acorn Plan and listen to its sad, comic chorus of Southern voices, and to the story of Billy Riley, a brooding, reckless young man struggling to resolve the competing claims of love, loyalty, and ambition.”

Publisher’s description: “Conservation for a New Era outlines the critical issues facing us in the 21st century, developed from the results of the World Conservation Congress in Barcelona in October 2008. The landmark publication takes on the pressing issues of today and highlights the solutions to be found through investing in nature. The book is essential reading for governments, businesses, and decision makers.”

Publisher’s description: “It’s open season on rich Americans. Leading the pack are two wealthy businessmen…with an aging wife apiece…. Two of them will soon be dead. Faced with this unnatural attrition, Jazz Jasper admits that her first run as an independent safari guide may also be her last. But every animal—even a desperate two-legged one—leaves a trail, and Jazz, hardly certain whether she is hunter or game, sets about trapping a remorseless human predator.”

Publisher’s description: “McQuillan’s Kenya is Isak Dinesen’s, seventy years later, a paradise lost but still breathtaking and rich in wildlife, with the potent magic to restore the spirits of Americans and Europeans in search of new beginnings. Recovering from a bad marriage and a worse divorce, American expatriate Jazz Jasper happily ekes out a living running safari tours and working for animal rights. When the lifeless body of wealthy American Ammet Laird, head of the Save the Elephants foundation, is found beside a watering hole, Emmet’s grieving lover, Mikki, presses her friend Jazz to investigate. But as Jazz stalks her game high in the forested hills and through the streets of Nairobi, she becomes certain that the murderer she seeks is someone she knows well….”

Publisher’s description: “…[T]his two-time Georgia Author of the Year gives us [a] user’s guide to the animal and mineral world, taking us on a poetic odyssey from the American West to the rainforests of Suriname, with many startling destinations (of spirit and location) along the way. These are powerful, life-changing poems offering new ways to connect with the natural universe, and successive epiphanies — the bridges that link bio and geography. As we have devastated the land, so also we have devastated each other. In these poems, the eroding of a love affair is seen through “a crumbling sandstone wing/studded with iron-stained crystals/beneath the city”; the hubris of a still-at-large former dictator and the grief of a victim’s sister intertwine in the startling red blooms of flamboyants shadowing a bullet-pocked wall. What abides is transience, that of “spiderweb baskets/glistening in grass, early morning,” and of a sky “a patina/of volcanic ash.” These poems yield that most generative of human possibilities: the chance and choice to begin again, to rediscover a “flamboyant faith,” a lost “nomenclature of wonder” that might just save us.”

Publisher’s description: “Not an institutional history, When the World Calls is the first complete and balanced look at the Peace Corps’s first fifty years. Revelatory and candid, Stanley Meisler’s engaging narrative exposes Washington infighting, presidential influence, and the Volunteers’ unique struggles abroad. Meisler deftly unpacks the complicated history with sharp analysis and memorable anecdotes, taking readers on a global trek starting with the historic first contingent of Volunteers to Ghana on August 30, 1961. The Peace Corps has served as an American emblem for world peace and friendship, yet few realize that it has sometimes tilted its agenda to meet the demands of the White House. Tracing its history through the past nine presidential administrations, Meisler discloses, for instance, how Lyndon Johnson became furious when Volunteers opposed his invasion of the Dominican Republic; he reveals how Richard Nixon literally tried to destroy the Peace Corps, and how Ronald Reagan endeavored to make it an instrument of foreign policy in Central America. But somehow the ethos of the Peace Corps endured, largely due to the perseverance of the 200,000 Volunteers themselves, whose shared commitment to effect positive global change has been a constant in one of our most complex-and valued-institutions.”

Publisher’s description: “Roland Merullo has consistently wowed critics with his brilliant storytelling and his refusal to be pigeonholed, hopscotching from the coming-of-age tale (In Revere, in Those Days) to the novel-as-fable (Golfing with God) to the road trip genre (Breakfast with Buddha). Now Merullo delivers a dazzling and finely nuanced political thriller about a clandestine plot to assassinate Cuban dictator Fidel Castro.”

Publisher’s description: “The author traces his 2007 summer near the shore of Italy’s Lake Como, where he played on several northern-region courses of distinction, shared lavish meals with his family, and interacted with a host of eccentric locals.”

Subject: The book appears to be based on the author’s Peace Corps experience in Zaire (present-day Democratic Republic of the Congo) and the city of Kinshasa. A main topic appears to be the Bonobo, once known as the pygmy chimpanzee.

Publisher’s description: “A fascinating, intimate portrait of Beijing through the lens of its oldest neighborhood, Dazhalan. Meyer examines how the bonds that hold the neighborhood together are being torn by forced evictions as century-old houses and ways of life are increasingly destroyed to make way for shopping malls, the capital’s first Wal-Mart, high-rise buildings, and widened streets for cars replacing bicycles.”

Publisher’s description: “How have different forms of colonialism shaped societies and their politics? What can borderland communities teach us about nation building and group identity? William F. S. Miles focuses on the Hausa-speaking people of West Africa, whose land is still split by an arbitrary boundary established by Great Britain and France at the turn of the century. In 1983, Miles returned as a Fulbright scholar to the region where he had served as a Peace Corps volunteer in the late 1970s. Already fluent in the Hausa language, he established residence in carefully selected twin villages on either side of the border separating the Republic of Niger from the Federal Republic of Nigeria. Over the next year, and then during subsequent visits, he traveled by horseback between the two places, conducting surveys, collecting oral testimony, and living the ethnographic life. Miles argues that the colonial imprint of the British and the French can still be discerned more than a generation after the conferring of formal independence on Nigeria and Niger.”

Publisher’s description: “Blank Darkness: Africanist Discourse in French is a brilliant and altogether convincing analysis of the way in which Western writers, from Homer to the twentieth century have…imposed their language of desire on the least-known part of the world and have called it ‘Africa.’ There are excellent readings here of writers ranging from Baudelaire, Rimbaud, Sade, and Celine to Conrad and Yambo Ouologuem, but even more impressive and important than these individual readings is Mr. Miller’s wide-ranging, incisive, and exact analysis of ‘Africanist’ discourse, what it has been and what it has meant in the literature of the Western world.” —James Olney, Louisiana State University

Publisher’s description: “The French slave trade forced more than one million Africans across the Atlantic to the islands of the Caribbean. It enabled France to establish Saint-Domingue, the single richest colony on earth, and it connected France, Africa, and the Caribbean permanently. Yet the impact of the slave trade on the cultures of France and its colonies has received surprisingly little attention. Until recently, France had not publicly acknowledged its history as a major slave-trading power. The distinguished scholar Christopher L. Miller proposes a thorough assessment of the French slave trade and its cultural ramifications, in a broad, circum-Atlantic inquiry. This magisterial work is the first comprehensive examination of the French Atlantic slave trade and its consequences as represented in the history, literature, and film of France and its former colonies in Africa and the Caribbean.”

Publisher’s description: “The untold story of Hamid Karzai’s dramatic rise to the presidency of Afghanistan and the problems he and his country face. In 2004, Hamid Karzai was elected president in Afghanistan’s first-ever democratic election. Today, criticized for indecisiveness and targeted for assassination by extremists, President Karzai struggles to build on the country’s modest post-Taliban achievements before civil unrest undermines his government. Now, author Nick Mills draws on months of candid personal interviews with the charismatic Afghan president to offer a revealing portrait of the figure known to millions by his familiar uniform of karakul cap and long green chappan. Timely and compelling, Karzai tells the fascinating story of a unique leader with a keen intellect, a natural gift for storytelling, and a presidency in peril.”

Publisher’s description: “From the day Cobb and Mary meet kayaking on Maine’s Allagash River and fall deeply in love, the two approach life with the same sense of adventure they use to conquer the river’s treacherous rapids. But rivers do not let go so easily…and neither does their love. So when Mary’s life takes the cruelest turn, she vows to face those rough waters on her own terms and asks Cobb to promise, when the time comes, to help her return to their beloved river for one final journey. Set against the rugged wilderness of Maine, the exotic islands of Indonesia, the sweeping panoramas of Yellowstone National Park, and the tranquil villages of rural New England, Eternal on the Water is at once heartbreaking and uplifting—a timeless, beautiful rendered story of true love’s power.”

Publisher’s description: “This wonderfully written memoir about a man, his dog, and their journey together is as revealing about life as it is warm and amusing. The author, Joseph Monninger, is the kind of man who “feels a connection with an animal beyond what others might consider normal.” When his dog, a golden retriever named Nellie, develops lumps that are most likely cancer, the forty-year-old author refuses to abandon her to the animal hospital; instead, he takes her on a final road trip through the West to visit their old mountain haunts and fish their favorite trout streams. As they wend their way through Wyoming, Idaho, and Montana, the author rediscovers the pleasures of fishing and hiking and also rediscovers his past. The memories of Nellie and what she has seen him through weave together with their outdoor adventures to create a poignant meditation on life, freedom, love, and nature.”

Publisher’s description: “Beetle-browed, nearly bald, a head that rode his collarbones like a bowling ball returning on rails, his waist size more than half his five-foot-eight height, Two Ton Tony Galento appeared nearly square, his legs two broomsticks jammed into a vertical hay bale. By all measures, he stood no chance when he stepped into the ring against the Brown Bomber, Joe Louis, the finest heavyweight of his generation, in Yankee Stadium on a June night in 1939. “I’ll moida da bum,” Galento predicted, and though Louis was no bum, Tony, the Falstaff of boxing, lifted him from the canvas with a single left hook and entered the record books as one of the few men to put the great Louis down. A palooka, a thug, a vibrant appetite of a man, he scrambled his way out of the streets and into the brightest light in American life. For two splendid seconds he stood on the canvas at Yankee Stadium, the great Joe Louis stretched out before him, champ of the world, the toughest man alive, the mythical hero of the waterfront, of Orange, New Jersey, of an American nation little more than a year away from war. Joe Monninger’s spellbinding portrait of a man, a moment, and an era reminds us that sometimes it is through effort, and not the end result, that people most enduringly define themselves.”

Publisher’s description: “Nothing in Monninger’s previous work…prepares one for this extraordinary novel, an intriguing psychological puzzle that explores the nature of belief in religion and in superstitious magic as well as the thin line between the two. AWOL Nazi soldier Frederich Loebus flees Europe, unwittingly ending up in West Africa, where he is captured and treated viciously by a primitive tribe. Escaping into the desert, he is saved from death by a mission of French nuns…. Under threat of prison by the French authorities, Loebus escapes again, hiding in the bush, where he becomes “purely African,” acquiring a reputation as a healer with miraculous powers. Years later, Loebus, now known as Father Faujas, has become a nyanga, or witch man, with the ability to inflict deadly curses; even after his death, his reputation lives on in a macabre fashion. Monninger renders a stunning picture of West Africa, describing the terrain, the weather, and the customs and rituals of native tribes in a measured prose that also chillingly sets off the brutal events of the narrative.”

Publisher’s description: “Set in Somalia just after its independence in the 1960s, Horses Like the Wind and Other Stories of Africa is a collection of nine short stories that paint a portrait of the many different lives that intertwine along the Horn of Africa. A ruthless horse dealer comes up against the best tracker in the Somali army; transplanted Italian farmers look to a future of stark disintegration as they struggle to hold on to their lands and their families; gutsy American women attempt to establish lives of their own in the remote East African desert; and a beggar and an idealist meet in a chance encounter on the steps of a Mogadishu bank, with mind-numbing consequences.”

Publisher’s description: “The stories in the Book of Genesis captured our ancestors’ imagination thousands of years ago—and they speak to us today. In Genesis, acclaimed television journalist Bill Moyers explores the contemporary relevance of the ageless wisdom from the Bible’s epic first book. Creation, temptation, murder, exile, and family strife—these themes emerge from every page of Genesis as fresh as the morning headlines or the evening news. Genesis invites readers into a lively and accessible discussion of the manifold meanings of these stories, and engages us in a fascinating exploration of the relationship between interpreter and text.”

Publisher’s description: “In this vivid, freewheeling expedition, Karin Müller travels the ancient route to explore its dramatic history and discover new adventures along its length and breadth…. As she spins the wool of her stories into a modern tapestry of faces and memories, Muller intertwines a chronicle of the ancient Inca from their race’s mythical birth on an island in lofty Lake Titicaca to their sudden plunge from the height of imperial power at the hands of a ragtag band of Spanish soldiers of fortune. We learn how they lived, worshipped, and warred, and why such a magnificent culture proved so vulnerable to invaders.”

Publisher’s description: “The author, an American woman, tells the story of her seven-month adventure hitchhiking through Vietnam in search of villages and people untouched by the encroaching commercialism of the Western world.”

Publisher’s description: “A panoramic survey of human excellence…from the age of Homer to our own time. Employing techniques that historians have developed over the last century but that rarely have been applied to books written for the general public, Murray compiles inventories of the people who have been essential to the stories of literature, music, art, philosophy, and the sciences—a total of 4,002 men and women from around the world, ranked according to their eminence. The heart of Human Accomplishment is a series of enthralling descriptive chapters: on the giants in the arts and what sets them apart from the merely great on the differences between great achievement in the arts and in the sciences on the meta-inventions, 14 crucial leaps in human capacity to create great art and science and on the patterns and trajectories of accomplishment across time and geography. Straightforwardly and undogmatically, Charles Murray takes on some controversial questions: Why has accomplishment been so concentrated in Europe? Among men? Since 1400? He presents evidence that the rate of great accomplishment has been declining in the last century, asks what it means, and offers a rich framework for thinking about the conditions under which the human spirit has expressed itself most gloriously.”

Publisher’s description: “To enter the world of these poems is to enter a place where all of us reside, a world full of emotional contradictions. And yet, Ann Neelon’s voice insists on making sense of the absurdities that come with living. At the end of this century, words like hope and community are not to be taken lightly, nor are they words that come easily.”

Publisher’s description: “Cheju Island, Korea’s historic island of exile, with a harsh natural environment, early developed a negative image as human habitat. The author challenges this perception and shows how Neo-Confucian state ideology during the Yi dynasty (A.D. 1392–1910) created and conserved the island as a viable habitat by using feng-shui—a powerful medieval science of surveying—to shape the island’s built environment and quality of life. The outcome, reflecting sustained political commitment to the philosophical concept of enlightened underdevelopment, was a sincere landscape inhabited by a virtuous people.”

Publisher’s description: “In 1962, Leslie Noyes was one of the first to answer the call of President Kennedy. She found herself in a remote village in Pakistan, 21 years old, and fresh from college graduation, with the only directive to “find something to do” in a Muslim village with no other Peace Corps volunteers, no other Westerners, no program, and scarce resources. Coming face to face with her naiveté, youthful arrogance, and inexperience, she muddles her way through her first year of service, moves on to a larger city with other volunteers, then returns home to pursue a career as an educator. Forty-seven years later, she returns to Pakistan—a much-changed woman to a much-changed country. She intersperses the current-day tale with the journal entries from 1962, thereby providing a colorful and poignant comparison between a country in its infancy and a country in transition, and the woman of 21 with the woman of 68.”

Publisher’s description: “Lays out the issues and relative costs facing the new president: prioritizing among competing demands for defense spending, homeland-security investment, diplomacy, and security assistance; determining how much money will be needed, available, and allocated. Publisher’s description: “Vanity Fair’s Maureen Orth always makes news. From Hollywood to murder trials to the corridors of politics, this National Magazine Award winner covers lives led in public, on camera, in the headlines. Here she takes us close-up into the world of fame-bridging entertainment, politics, and news—and the lives of those who understand the chemistry, the very DNA, of fame and how to create it, manipulate it, sustain it. Moving from former Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher to Michael Jackson, the ultimate child/monster of show business, Orth describes our evolution from a society where talent attracted attention to a place where the star-making machinery of the “celebrity-industrial complex” shapes, reshapes, and sells its gods (and monsters) to the public…. Orth delivers a portrait of an era. She shows us the real world of the big room where the rules that govern mere mortals don’t matter—and anonymity is a crime.”

Publisher’s description: “The Assassins’ Gate: America in Iraq recounts how the United States set about changing the history of the Middle East and became ensnared in a guerilla war in Iraq. It brings to life the people and ideas that created the Bush administration’s war policy and led America to the Assassins’ Gate—the main point of entry into the American zone in Baghdad. The consequences of that policy are shown in the author’s brilliant reporting on the ground in Iraq, where he made four tours on assignment for The New Yorker. We see up close the struggles of American soldiers and civilians and Iraqis from all backgrounds, thrown together by a war that followed none of the preconceived scripts. The Assassins’ Gate also describes the place of the war in American life: the ideological battles in Washington that led to chaos in Iraq, the ordeal of a fallen soldier’s family, and the political culture of a country too bitterly polarized to realize such a vast and morally complex undertaking. George Packer’s first-person narrative combines the scope of an epic history with the depth and intimacy of a novel, creating a masterful account of America’s most controversial foreign venture since Vietnam.”

Publisher’s description: “…[T]he mostly young men and women who embraced America’s project so enthusiastically that they were prepared to risk their lives for it by aiding the U.S. forces constitute a small minority. On a cold, wet night in January 2007, George Packer met two such Iraqi men in the lobby of the Palestine Hotel, in central Baghdad to hear their story and those of other Iraqis working as translators and additional key personnel for the U.S. military and occupation authorities. They assumed that their perspective would be valuable to foreigners who knew little or nothing of Iraq. But instead of respect and gratitude, those who chose to help bridge the gap between the occupiers and the occupied were met with suspicion and hostility. They have been killed by insurgents and militias, ignored by U.S. officials, fired from their jobs without reason or recourse, and prevented from fleeing to the States for safety. Based on Packer’s account in The New Yorker, Betrayed is a riveting and morally complex drama that explores in the Iraqis’ own words the ways in which we have already abandoned them.”

Publisher’s summary: “In this collection of essays from the past extraordinary decade, from September 11 to the rise of Barack Obama, journalist Packer brings insight and passion to his accounts of the war on terror, Iraq, troubled societies, political writers, and the 2008 election.”

Publisher’s description: “Now restored to print with a new Foreword by Philip Gourevitch and an Afterword by the author, this book is a frank, moving, and vivid account of contemporary life in West Africa. Stationed as a Peace Corps instructor in the village of Lavié (the name means “wait a little more”) in tiny and underdeveloped Togo, Packer reveals his own schooling at the hands of an unforgettable array of townspeople—peasants, chiefs, charlatans, children, market women, cripples, crazies, and those who, having lost or given up much of their traditional identity and fastened their hopes on “development,” find themselves trapped between the familiar repetitions of rural life and the chafing monotony of waiting for change.”

Publisher’s description: “During the last three decades, Nicaragua posed three of the most difficult challenges faced by U.S. foreign policy-makers in the third world: how to cope with a declining, repressive, but previously “friendly” dictator? How to relate to an anti-American revolutionary government? How to facilitate a democratic transition? The Nicaraguan challenge was to establish a democratic and autonomous government, with as much support and as little interference as possible from the great powers. This book demonstrates how an unproductive interaction led to both sides’ worst nightmares. Through the fall of Anastasio Somoza, the rise of the Sandinistas, and the contra war, the United States and Nicaragua seemed destined to repeat the mistakes made by the U.S. and Cuba forty years before. The 1990 election in Nicaragua broke the pattern. Robert Pastor was a major US policymaker in the critical period leading up to and following the Sandinista Revolution of 1979. ...This revised and updated edition covers the events of the democratic transition, and it extracts the lessons to be learned from the past.”

Publisher’s description: “Robert Pastor maintains that the collapse of Communism is less important in permitting the United States to escape the whirlpool of Latin American politics than are the new trends of democracy and freer trade in the region.”

Publisher’s description: “The unprecedented political power of the Ottoman imperial harem in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries is widely viewed as illegitimate and corrupting…. By examining political action in the context of household networks, Peirce demonstrates that female power was a logical, indeed an intended, consequence of political structures…. The Imperial Harem argues that the exercise of political power was tied to definitions of sexuality. Within the dynasty, the hierarchy of female power, like the hierarchy of male power, reflected the broader society’s concern for social control of the sexually active.

Publisher’s description: Confessions of an Economic Hit Man reveals a game that, according to John Perkins, is “as old as Empire” but has taken on new and terrifying dimensions in an era of globalization. And Perkins should know. For many years he worked for an international consulting firm where his main job was to convince LDCs [less developed countries] around the world to accept multibillion-dollar loans for infrastructure projects and to see to it that most of this money ended up at Halliburton, Bechtel, Brown and Root, and other United States engineering and construction companies. This book, which many people warned Perkins not to write, is a blistering attack on a little-known phenomenon that has had dire consequences on both the victimized countries and the U.S.”

Publisher’s description: “John Perkins has seen economic meltdowns before—the banking industry collapse, the rising tide of unemployment, the shuttering of businesses... are all too familiar symptoms of a far greater disease. As an economic hit man, he was involved in events once confined to the Third World, that have now sent the United States—and in fact the entire planet—spiraling toward disaster. Here, Perkins shows how we’ve been hoodwinked by the CEOs who run those few corporations that control the capital, land, and resources—and the politicians they manipulate. These corporate fat cats have sold us all on what he calls predatory capitalism, an exploitation of the many to benefit the already very wealthy. Their arrogance, gluttony, and mismanagement have brought us to the edge. But there is a way out. As Perkins makes clear, we can create a healthy economy that will encourage businesses to act responsibly, in the interests of their employees, their customers, the environment, and society at large.”

Publisher’s description: Village in the Meadows in the Black Sea region of Turkey was Malcolm Pfunder’s Peace Corps site and home for nearly two years in the 1960s. These memoirs about his time there spring from a desire to share the memorable, often humorous stories of the things that he did, and that happened there. The Peace Corps experience entailed a great deal of time spent outdoors and lots of freedom to experiment, with the vague impetus of “Go forth and be relevant” as encouragement. Pfunder’s narrative of his “wonderful adventure” among the locals of that beautiful mountain village is a sympathetic story of the villagers’ way of life at the time and what he and his site partner Allen did to try to improve it, followed by Pfunder’s interesting account of all the changes he has seen occur in the intervening years on periodic visits back to the village.”

Subject: This is a personal narrative of Peace Corps service in India, apparently involving a birth-control project.

Publisher’s description: “Emerging Africa describes the too-often-overlooked positive changes that have taken place in much of Africa since the mid-1990s. In 17 countries, five fundamental and sustained breakthroughs are making old assumptions increasingly untenable. These include the rise of democracy brought on by the end of the Cold War and apartheid; stronger economic management; the end of the debt crisis and a more constructive relationship with the international community; the introduction of new technologies, especially mobile phones and the Internet; and the emergence of a new generation of leaders. With these significant changes, the countries of emerging Africa seem poised to lead the continent out of the conflict, stagnation, and dictatorships of the past. The countries discussed in the book are Botswana, Burkina Faso, Cape Verde, Ethiopia, Ghana, Lesotho, Mali Mauritius, Mozambique, Namibia, Rwanda, São Tomé and Principe, Seychelles, South Africa, Tanzania, Uganda, and Zambia.”

Publisher’s description: “A ship filled with boat people floats listlessly toward a reef. Aboard is an escaping South Vietnamese lieutenant carrying a module for an extravagant CIA computer left behind after the victory of the Communist forces. Peter Voss, who operated this computer for the U.S. Army from Beach House 7, wants to reclaim the powerful module to help him rifle banks in southeast Asia. He recruits the help of David Sloan, a recently retired banker and erstwhile pilot. In his second novel (The Kaligarh Fault), Roadarmel suspends the reader between Conradian tragedy and le Carré-like complexity. He adroitly manipulates a clutch of hard-boiled, sometimes seedy characters, all of whom face despair on the one hand and deep-seated corruption on the other. Fast-paced, gritty dialogue and grisly scenes keep this thriller a cut above the average.”

Publisher’s description: “Some call her the Apache Joan of Arc. For more than a century, Apaches have kept alive the memory of their hero Lozen. Lozen, valiant warrior, revered shaman, and beautiful woman, fought alongside Geronimo, Cochise, and Victorio, holding out against the armies of both the United States and Mexico…. Orphaned sister of Victorio, Lozen has known since childhood that the spirits have chosen her to defend Apache freedom. As the U.S. army prepares to move her people to an Arizona reservation, Lozen forsakes marriage and motherhood to fight among the men. Supported by her brother and the other chiefs, Lozen proves her mettle as a soldier, reconnaissance scout, and peerless military strategist. Rafe Collins is a young adventurer and veteran of the Mexican War. On a dangerous journey between El Paso and Santa Fe, he builds an unlikely but enduring rapport with the Warm Spring Apaches. When his bond to Lozen goes far beyond friendship, he must undertake a perilous course that will change his life forever. A sensitive treatment of a little-known Native American figure, Ghost Warrior is a rich and powerful frontier tale with unforgettable characters.”

Publisher’s description: “As Commander-in-chief George Washington declares a major victory in New York, the rest of the colonies separate into Patriots and Tories. Kate Darby never expected to be swept up in this political storm. The Darbys are Quakers who have pledged their allegiance to God first—but that soon changes. Kate’s younger brother, Seth, can no longer deny his soul’s cry against tyranny. Fleeing from his Loyalist parents’ house to join General Washington’s ragtag forces, Seth enters a life he never expected. With the influx of British soldiers, Philadelphia soon becomes a temporary base camp for the English forces. When the Darbys find themselves forced to take in Major Jonathan Andre, Kate falls quickly for his charm. Despite her warring affections, Kate finds herself drawn deep into the war. As she attempts to follow her brother, she risks her life and her family’s reputation by becoming a spy for the patriot forces, a role that quickly transforms the once-timid Quaker girl.”

Publisher’s description: “A historical novel on the colonization of Maryland in the seventeenth century. It follows the fortunes of immigrants, among them a wealthy noblewoman fleeing the persecution of Catholics in England, and a girl pickpocket who is being deported for sale as a servant. Filled with details on everyday life, the story describes New World conflicts between Virginians and Marylanders, Catholics and Protestants.”

Publisher’s description: “Lady Asano vows to avenge the forced suicide execution of her father and restore his name to honor. To do so she will have to travel the Tokaido Road.”

Publisher’s description: “Former hostage, Barry Rosen, gives a first-person account of the takeover of the American Embassy in Iran and his 444 days in captivity juxtaposed with his wife’s account of the effect of these events on the families of the hostages.”

Rosen was serving as press attaché at the U.S. Embassy in Tehran, when militants took him and 51 other Americans hostage on November 4, 1979.

Publisher’s description: This is a novel about a former Peace Corps volunteer now working as a refugee resettlement officer in Istanbul, who finds himself hosting two friends from his two Peace Corps villages in Kyrgyzstan, “unaware that they will soon face one of the most disastrous earthquakes of the century. Sweeping, compassionate, and deeply moving, this novel celebrates the power of human connection in a largely unsettled world.”

Publisher’s description: “On March 1, 1999, American safari guide Mark Ross was camping with four clients in Uganda searching for endangered mountain gorillas. By day’s end, two of these clients and six other tourists were dead at the hands of Rwandan rebels. As a man who loves East Africa, Ross felt betrayed by this horror, which made headlines around the world. He writes, “The continent has always been the love of my life. Now there is trouble between us.” Dangerous Beauty is the story of that love and trouble. Ross writes here about his close-up encounters with danger and natural beauty in Kenya, Tanzania, Zimbabwe, and Uganda. He describes his walks in the bush and the way he teaches his clients to read unearthly silences and stillnesses in the wind that signify trouble. He writes about deadly charges by elephants and the electric excitement of witnessing the mass migrations of wildebeest and zebras. He writes, too, in detail about the terrible events of 1999.”

Publisher’s description: “Icy Sparks is the sad, funny and transcendent tale of a young girl growing up in the mountains of Eastern Kentucky during the 1950s. Gwyn Hyman Rubio’s beautifully written first novel revolves around Icy Sparks, an unforgettable heroine in the tradition of Scout in To Kill a Mockingbird or Will Treed in Cold Sassy Tree. At the age of ten, Icy, a bright, curious child orphaned as a baby but raised by adoring grandparents, begins to have strange experiences. Try as she might, her “secrets”—verbal croaks, groans, and physical spasms—keep afflicting her. As an adult, she will find out she has Tourette’s Syndrome, a rare neurological disorder, but for years her behavior is the source of mystery, confusion, and deep humiliation. Narrated by a grown-up Icy, the book chronicles a difficult, but ultimately hilarious and heartwarming journey, from her first spasms to her self-acceptance as a young woman. Curious about life beyond the hills, talented, and energetic, Icy learns to cut through all barriers—physical, mental, and spiritual—in order to find community and acceptance.”

Publisher’s description: “Now, Rubio has done it again with The Woodsman’s Daughter, a richly absorbing tale of the gothic South that, like Icy Sparks, has another unforgettable heroine at its heart. Dalia is the brassy and beautiful eldest daughter of Monroe Miller, a shrewd turpentine farmer in 1800s southern Georgia haunted by a devastating secret… In this spellbinding, page-turning epic, Rubio brings the swaying pines, humble shantytowns, and insular bustle of small-town living vibrantly to life. The Woodsman’s Daughter is certain to cement Rubio’s reputation as a major southern voice in American fiction.”

Publisher’s description: “In the heart of Botswana, the lives of three Americans—an undercover CIA agent, his disaffected wife, and an iconoclastic black holistic physician—entangle with that of a local populist leader as a violent insurrection erupts in the area…. Through lives lived ardently in an unforgiving land, Mortals examines with wit and insight the dilemmas of power, religion, rebellion, and contending versions of and love. It is a study of a marriage over time, and a man’s struggle to find his way when his private and public worlds are shifting.”

Publisher description: “In this fascinating, wide-ranging book, a Quaker lawyer explores the relationship between Quakers and the American legal system and discusses Friends' legal ethics. …Nancy Black Sagafi-nejad sketches the history and beliefs of the early Quakers in England and America, then goes on to look at important twentieth-century constitutional law cases involving Quakers, many involving civil rights issues. Sagafi-nejad’s survey of 100 Quaker lawyers shows them to be at odds with the adversarial system and highlights a legal practice that must balance truth-telling and zealous advocacy. The Quaker development of extralegal dispute resolution to solve debates amongst Friends is discussed, along with a look at the possible future of mediation.”

Publisher’s description: “Cuba: Confronting the U.S. Embargo details and analyzes the effects of the U.S. embargo on Cuban society and the response of Cuba and its population to overcoming its consequences. Although the embargo disrupts and harms almost all aspects of life, the book focuses on those sectors most affected. It is framed by the issue of human rights—from both the Cuban and the U.S. perspective—an ideological gulf which underpins the political differences that exist between the two countries and which raises the question of how extensively the implementation of the embargo violates the human rights of Cuba and its citizens.”

Publisher’s description: “Many African countries are now described as “Fourth World nations,” ones which essentially have no future. How could this have happened? Through the scope of the 1960s, the first decade of African independence, Peter Schwab presents a compelling and provocative answer to this question. Designing West Africa tells the story of a pivotal decade in African history, when the fate of the continent was decided. Focusing on the six most visible leaders of the period—Sékou Touré, Kwame Nkrumah, and others—Schwab shows how Africa served as a ground to play out larger international conflicts, namely the Cold War. He does not fall back solely on blaming non-African involvement for the failure to build a viable leadership for the continent rather, he critiques the African leaders themselves for their individual failings.”

Publisher’s description: “Can Africa survive? Many of the nations of sub-Saharan Africa have all but ceased to exist as organized states: tyranny, diseases such as AIDS, civil war and ethnic conflict, and border invasions threaten the complete disintegration of a region. Peter Schwab offers a clear, authoritative portrait of a continent on the brink. Globalization and an accompanying level of economic health have passed over Africa. Added to these factors is a patronizing attitude from the West that change in Africa must take place within Western parameters, a UN that lacks any real power, and a U.S. foreign policy in Africa that is unclear. Looking to South Africa as an example of successful Western support of an African nation, Schwab suggests that the United States should use its leverage to help democrats into positions of power and then work with them under a framework dictated by the leaders themselves. It is only with a distinctly African approach to African problems that the survival of the continent can be assured.”

Publisher’s description: “A former deputy director of the Peace Corps offers both a first-hand look at life in the agency—in the field and at headquarters—and a radical reinterpretation of its history during the Nixon and Ford administrations. By the end of the 1960s, the Peace Corps was in disarray. Debate raged over its effectiveness, and many new volunteers embraced the anti-establishment behavior of the days’ youth. When President Nixon appointed Joseph Blatchford as director in 1969, some insiders felt the agency’s days were numbered—especially when Blatchford set about re-evaluating the Peace Corps’ mission and initiated a program called New Directions to reorient its work. Many observers simply lump Blatchford’s efforts with the failures and faults of the Nixon administration. David Searles, however, contends that the new director’s initiatives revitalized the Peace Corps and made it more relevant. He relates the history of these policies and their implementation in the field, drawing on his experience as country director for the Peace Corps in the Philippines. He shows how, despite constant carping from veterans of the early Peace Corps and much furor at headquarters, New Directions re-energized the agency and renewed and reaffirmed the Peace Corps’ mission.”

smoldered as ominously and impotently as its politics for years, but lately things seem to be heating up. Mitchell Wilson, an American expatriate and economist for the Ministry of imbued with Shacochis’s insight into human affairs that “ranks with the best of Conrad

Liffey probes the complex ethnic mix—Muslim, Jewish, Baha’i, Christian, and secular—of the Persian communities in Los Angeles. A gripping tale that confronts youthful idealism with perfervid fundamentalism, it lands bright, earnest Fariborz Bayat, who has gone missing from an elite L.A. high school with three other Persian-American boys, in a cell of Arab terrorists. Hired to find the boys, Liffey finds himself in a nightmare, unless Publisher’s description: “In the gripping fifth novel of what the Philadelphia Inquirer calls a “lean and literate” crime series, Jack Liffey—the rough-edged, compassionate private detective who garners even more enthusiastic reviews and fans with each new case—once again searches the volatile and dangerous ethnic communities buried in the urban sprawl of Los Angeles for another of the city’s mysteriously lost. This time out, Liffey is looking for a prominent 1960s civil rights campaigner’s adopted son, who has gone suspiciously missing in the wake of an unsettling run-in with a motorcycle gang at a local jazz club. The whole city is unsettled, in fact, by the chokehold death of Abdullah-Ibrahim—a black Muslim and the Dodgers’ new ace spitball pitcher—at the hands of the L.A. police. In the course of his investigation, Liffey runs afoul of skinheads, white supremacists, and black separatists. He also confronts his own latent racism before the city erupts into the full-fledged civil riot that could cost Liffey his life.”

Publisher’s description: “An exquisitely wrought debut novel about sisterhood through three generations in Ireland and America. It is 1921 in Ireland. When their mother dies in childbirth, Moira and Julia O’Leary are left to rear their infant sister, Ann, while their father, a sheep farmer, despairs. After Ann dies, Moira and Julia depart Cork for Boston, but the painful secret behind Ann’s death haunts their new lives and presages the confusion that will come to trouble the next generation. Moira and Julia have always been strikingly different, but theirs is a mercilessly dependable relationship—Moira’s boldness is fortified by Julia’s quiet inner purpose, while Julia lives vicariously through her sister’s impulsive actions. Moira’s Crossing charts their shared journey through marriage, children, and lobstering off the coast of Maine. At once an examination of the troubled intimacy of sisterhood and an inquiry into the meaning of faith, Moira’s Crossing is also a story of what we leave behind and who we become because of it.”

Publisher’s description: “In early 2003, Ellen R. Sheeley began to educate herself about “honor” killings, particularly those that take place in Jordan. That summer she journeyed from her home in San Francisco, California, USA, to Amman, Jordan, where she learned of the needs for empirical, objective, baseline data pertaining to the Jordanian public’s attitudes, opinions, and beliefs about “honor” killings and for a sustained marketing campaign to change hearts and minds. As a seasoned marketing professional, she was confident she had the ability and the qualifications to fulfill these needs. Unable to secure funding or sponsorship from the obvious and even the not-so-obvious sources and, yet, unwilling for mere lack of financial support to give up on the needs of the at-risk individuals and the victims, she quit her job, moved from her home, placed her personal effects in storage, bade adieu to her loved ones, and returned to Amman in October 2005 to perform the work pro bono, funded by her private savings. Reclaiming Honor in Jordan is a result of this effort and reveals a number of surprising findings about public opinion on this subject. Profits from this book will contribute to “honor” killings work.”

Publisher’s description: “E-mails proposing an “urgent business relationship” help make fraud Nigeria’s largest source of foreign revenue after oil. But scams are also a central part of Nigeria’s domestic cultural landscape. Corruption is so widespread in Nigeria that its citizens call it simply “the Nigerian factor.” Willing or unwilling participants in corruption at every turn, Nigerians are deeply ambivalent about it—resigning themselves to it, justifying it, or complaining about it. They are painfully aware of the damage corruption does to their country and see themselves as their own worst enemies, but they have been unable to stop it. A Culture of Corruption is a profound and sympathetic attempt to understand the dilemmas average Nigerians face every day as they try to get ahead—or just survive—in a society riddled with corruption…. It is impossible to comprehend Nigeria today—from vigilantism and resurgent ethnic nationalism to rising Pentecostalism and accusations of witchcraft and cannibalism—without understanding the role played by corruption and popular reactions to it.”

Publisher’s description: “The memoir and the movie have only scratched the surface. Black Man’s Grave tells what happened to place the boy-turned-soldier in jeopardy and why Sierra Leone’s diamonds acquired their bloody tinge. Meet the greedy politicians who hijacked a fledgling democracy, the rebels who brought them down, and the villagers who struggled to survive the country’s chaotic descent. The cast includes Sierra Leone’s “big man,” Siaka Stevens; RUF [Revolutionary United Front] leader Foday Sankoh, whose grandfatherly demeanor belied the viciousness with which he sought to impose his “revolution”; and one who aspired to the big-man role, Charles Taylor from next-door Liberia. Taylor’s support for Sierra Leone’s rebel war expanded from initial hostility toward Stevens’s handpicked successor into a commercial venture that supplied arms in exchange for diamonds. In an offshoot of that pernicious trade, links between Sierra Leone’s diamonds and al-Qaeda have been traced. The revelations of Black Man’s Grave help us understand the frustrations that simmer throughout much of the third world and threaten a peaceful future.”

Her work has been anthologized in New Stories from the South and Voices of the Xiled. Polite Society resounds with unusual spirit and searing honesty. Darren, a not-so-nice young woman from Tennessee, joins the Peace Corps for lack of a better idea. Fitting in with Southerners was hard enough, but trying to understand friends, lovers, and herself while unemployed in Senegal sends Darren reeling. The world that spirals around her is full of outrageous encounters, interracial affairs, and nights of drunken revelry. Against the backdrop of a society that is governed by hospitality and good manners but is full of strangers and unfamiliar customs, Darren runs headlong into her own insecurities, fears, and desires.”

Publisher’s description: “A young man’s quest to reconcile his deafness in an unforgiving world leads to a remarkable sojourn in a remote African village that pulsates with beauty and violence. “These are hearing aids. They take the sounds of the world and amplify them.” Josh Swiller recited this speech to himself on the day he arrived in Mununga, a dusty village on the shores of Lake Mweru…Zambia, where Swiller worked as a Peace Corps volunteer for two years. There he would encounter a world where violence, disease, and poverty were the mundane facts of life. But despite the culture shock, Swiller finally commanded attention—everyone always listened carefully to the white man, even if they did not always follow his instruction. …Swiller had finally found, he believed, a place where his deafness did not interfere, a place he could call home. Until, that is, a nightmarish incident blasted away his newfound convictions. At once a poignant account of friendship through adversity, a hilarious comedy of errors, and a gripping narrative of escalating violence, The Unheard is an unforgettable story from a noteworthy new talent.”

Publisher’s description: “In The Night of the Lunar Eclipse, her second collection, Szumowski explores the roots of our culture while remaining true to her own. Time collapses in this collection, melding the images of our past: archangels and ancient Rome with a saloon somewhere in east-nowhere Frackville, creating a unique texture to her work that is light, loving, and just this side of ecstatic. Szumowski’s work unravels the tenderness from each subject with gentle and eager wordplay that scintillates the heart as it pierces with sublime purity. In her poems, the sensitive, aching of the human heart reminds us that the real world is still in motion its inhabitants clinging to something beautiful even after we have reached the final page.”

Publisher’s description: “I Want This World explores what it means to be human and in danger across many landscapes: the costs of World War II to family-forced labor in Siberia, the Italian Campaign, prison camp in Murmansk, as a hostage in Africa and in the muddied politics in the Rio Grande Valley. We feel the complexity, terror and beauty inherent in each of these domains. If I Want This World is about moments that overcome as well as those that make us shudder, it is also about delight and irresistible love. The poet laughs herself to collapse seeing the roseate spoonbills, the great crater, Ngorogoro, the immigrants’ shrine in the Rio Grande Valley, the way Poles crowd Chopin’s house every Sunday for concerts as if Chopin were still playing his Polonaise. Margaret Szumowski challenges us to experience the ineffable. Reading about Bronislaw, Czechek, Victor, Christine, and Jan Szumowski, we wonder how to measure ourselves against the previous generation without feeling inadequately endowed with courage. To understand the effect of war on the human spirit, the poet gently brings us to enter the minds of another generation.”

Publisher’s description: “…Tayler penetrates one of the most isolated, forbidding regions on earth—the Sahel. This lower expanse of the Sahara marks the southern limit of Islam’s reach on the continent. It boasts such mythologized places as Mopti and Timbuktu, as well as Africa’s poorest countries, Chad and Niger. In parts of the Sahel, hard-line Sharia law rules and slaves are still traded. Racked by lethal harmattan winds, chronic civil wars, and grim Islamic fundamentalism, it is not the ideal place for a traveler with a U.S. passport. Tayler finds genuine danger in many guises, from drunken soldiers to a thieving teenage mob. But he also encounters patience and generosity of the sort only Africans can achieve. Traveling overland by the same rickety means as the natives themselves—tottering, overfull buses, bush taxis with holes in their floors, disgruntled camels—he uses his fluency in French and Arabic (the region’s lingua francas) to illuminate its roiling, enigmatic cultures and connect with its inhabitants as no other Western writer could.”

Publisher’s description: “…Tayler penetrates one of the most isolated, mythic regions on earth—the Moroccan Sahara. Traveling along routes little altered since the Middle Ages, he uses his linguistic and observational gifts to illuminate a venerable, enigmatic culture of nomads and mystics. Though no stranger to privation (having journeyed across Siberia and up the Congo for his earlier books), Tayler is unprepared for the physical challenges that await him in a Sahara desiccated by an unprecedented eight-year drought. The last Westerner to attempt this trek left his skeleton in the sand, and even Tayler’s camels wilt in the searing wastes. But he also finds a certain purity; the Saharawi Bedouins are Ur-Arabs, untouched by the modernity or radicalism that festers elsewhere in the Arab world. By revealing their ingenuity, their wit, their unrivaled hospitality, and more, Tayler upends our notions of what is, and what is not, essentially Arab.”

Publisher’s description: “A gripping journey through some of the planet’s most remote and challenging terrain and its peoples, in search of why democracy has yet to thrive in lands it seemed so recently ready to overtake. Across the largest landmass on earth, in lands once conquered by Genghis Khan and exploited by ruthless Communist regimes, autocratic and dictatorial states are again arising, growing wealthy on petrodollars and low-cost manufacturing. More and more, they are challenging the West. Media reports focus on developments in Moscow and Beijing, but the peoples inhabiting the vast expanses in between remain mostly unseen and unheard, their daily lives and aspirations scarcely better known to us now than they were in Cold War days. Tayler finds, among many others, a dissident Cossack advocating mass beheadings, a Muslim in Kashgar calling on the United States to bomb Beijing, and Chinese youths in Urumqi desiring nothing more than sex, booze, and rock and roll—all while confronting over and over again the contradiction of people who value liberty and the free market but idealize tyrants who oppose both. From the steppes of southern Russia to the conflict-ridden Caucasus Mountains to the deserts of central Asia and northern China, Tayler shows that our maps have gone blank at the worst possible time.”

Publisher’s description: “In a custom-built boat, Jeffrey Tayler travels some 2,400 miles down the Lena River from near Lake Baikal to high above the Arctic Circle, recreating a journey first made by Cossack forces more than three hundred years ago. He is searching for primeval beauty and a respite from the corruption, violence, and self-destructive urges that typify modern Russian culture, but instead he finds the roots of that culture—in Cossack villages unchanged for centuries, in Soviet outposts full of listless drunks, in stark ruins of the gulag, and in grand forests hundreds of miles from the nearest hamlet. That’s how far he is from help when he realizes that his guide, Vadim, a burly Soviet army veteran embittered by his experiences in Afghanistan, detests all humanity, including Tayler. Yet he needs Vadim’s superb skills if he is to survive a voyage that quickly turns hellish. Though they must navigate roiling whitewater in howling storms, they eschew life jackets because, as Vadim explains, the frigid water would kill them before they could swim to shore. Though Tayler has trekked by camel through the Sahara and canoed down the Congo during the revolt against Mobutu, he has never felt so threatened as he does now.”

Publisher’s description: “The story behind ginseng is as remarkable as the root itself. Prized for its legendary curative powers, ginseng launched the rise to power of China’s last great dynasty, inspired battles between France and England, and sparked a boom in Minnesota comparable to the California Gold Rush. It has made and broken the fortunes of many and has inspired a subculture in rural America unrivaled by any herb in the plant kingdom. Today ginseng is at the very center of alternative medicine, believed to improve stamina, relieve stress, stimulate the immune system, enhance mental clarity, and restore well-being. It is now being studied by medical researchers for the treatment of cancer, diabetes, and Parkinson’s disease. In Ginseng, the Divine Root, David Taylor tracks the path of this fascinating plant—from the forests east of the Mississippi to the bustling streets of Hong Kong and the remote corners of China. He becomes immersed in a world full of wheelers, dealers, diggers, and stealers, all with a common goal: to hunt down the elusive “Root of Life.” Weaving together his intriguing adventures with ginseng’s rich history, Taylor uncovers a story of international crime, ancient tradition, botany, herbal medicine, and the vagaries of human nature.”

Publisher’s description: “In the wake of the Crash of 1929, companies fired an average of 20,000 workers every day; in some cities over half the adult population was unemployed. The story of writers rescued from joblessness by the Federal Writers’ Project is as much the compelling drama of people caught when a soaring economy suddenly crashes as it is the fascinating account of some of America’s best writers—before they were famous—turned loose on the landscape with a government mandate to ‘hold up a mirror to America.’ ... In 1935, the federal government’s WPA Writers’ Project offered a lifeline: it hired unemployed writers to document life in America for a series of state travel guides. The WPA writers walked streets, interviewed passersby, described urban landmarks and rural landscapes, chatted about nightclubs and bars, recorded folklore and folk music, and compiled what is now very precious information about how Americans lived and how America looked. With striking images, firsthand accounts, and new discoveries from personal collections and other sources, David Taylor’s Soul of a People brings it all to vibrant and unruly life: the writers, their friendships, the hardships, the political battles, and the enduring outcome.”

Summary: This scholarly volume is predicated on the view that the Peace Corps is about the volunteers rather than the bureaucratic machinations of the Washington staff. Country experts such as anthropologist Paul L. Doughty and political scientist David Scott Palmer (Peru, 1962–64) authored its 14 chapters, which are country case studies examining cultural aspects that their Peace Corps programs need to take into account. For the occasion of the Peace Corps 50th Anniversary, the MIT Press and Stanford University Libraries have made this early anthropological approach to the Peace Corps mission available for downloading at Professor Textor’s Stanford University Web site at: http://www.stanford.edu/~rbtextor/publications.html

Publisher’s description: “First published more than thirty years ago, Paul Theroux’s strange, unique, and hugely entertaining railway odyssey has become a modern classic of travel literature. Here Theroux recounts his early adventures on an unusual grand continental tour. Asia’s fabled trains—the Orient Express, the Khyber Pass Local, the Frontier Mail, the Golden Arrow to Kuala Lumpur, the Mandalay Express, the Trans-Siberian Express—are the stars of a journey that takes him on a loop eastbound from London’s Victoria Station to Tokyo Central, then back from Japan on the Trans-Siberian.
Brimming with Theroux’s signature humor and wry observations, this engrossing chronicle is essential reading for both the ardent adventurer and the armchair traveler.”

Publisher’s description: “A rich and insightful travel book in the tradition that made Paul Theroux’s reputation, Dark Star Safari takes us the length of Africa by rattlertrap bus, forgotten train, and rusting steamer. Theroux confronts delay, discomfort, bullets, and bad food while encountering a remarkable mix of places and people. Beginning in Cairo and ending in Cape Town, he goes on the ultimate safari to the true heart of Africa, not the lavish game parks with overfed guests but the small villages of the bush and the filthy chaotic cities that define this forgotten continent. No one is more qualified than Paul Theroux to undertake the vast task of describing Africa. He got his start as a writer in Africa nearly forty years ago when he taught in the Peace Corps in Malawi and at Makerere University in Uganda. Now he returns to find countries in the throes of corruption and poverty. Able to strike up a conversation with anyone, Theroux is the perfect guide: keenly observant, wry, entertaining, and wise. We encounter villagers, farmers, bureaucrats, political figures, white settlers, smug tourists, and aid workers, each with a distinctive point of view. ...The first account of a single trip since his bestseller The Pillars of Hercules, Dark Star Safari conveys all the vast contrasts and the glory and misery of Africa and is Paul Theroux at his very best.”

Publisher’s description: “Starting with a rush-hour subway ride to South Station in Boston to catch the Lake Shore Limited to Chicago, Theroux winds up on the poky, wandering Old Patagonian Express steam engine, which comes to a halt in a desolate land of cracked hills and thorn bushes. But with Theroux the view along the way is what matters: the monologuing Mr. Thornberry in Costa Rica, the bogus priest of Cali, and the blind Jorge Luis Borges, who delights in having Theroux read Robert Louis Stevenson to him.”

Publisher’s description: “In a breathtaking adventure story, the paranoid and brilliant inventor Allie Fox takes his family to live in the Honduran jungle, determined to build a civilization better than the one they’ve left. Fleeing from an America he sees as mired in materialism and conformity, he hopes to rediscover a purer life. But his utopian experiment takes a dark turn when his obsessions lead the family toward unimaginable danger.”

Publisher’s description: “Paul Theroux invites us to join him on the journey of a lifetime, in the grand romantic tradition, by train across Europe, through the vast underbelly of Asia into the heart of Russia, and then up to China. Here is China by rail (the Iron Rooster is the name of a train), as seen and heard through the eyes and ears of one of the most intrepid and insightful travel writers of our time.”

Subject: “Set in Africa, this is an acclaimed collection of a novella and six stories about the intractable problems of the continent, Ethiopia in particular, as seen by adventurous women. For example, “Jiru Road,” the novella, is a first-person account of Sarah’s life in the Peace Corps.” African Visas is published posthumously; Thomas died on a relief mission to Ethiopia on August 7, 1989, in a plane crash that also killed Congressman Mickey Leland of Texas and 13 other people.

Publisher’s description: “A young woman doctor in Africa [Tanzania], facing exile, seeks to touch the culture she was raised in through a young African woman whom she has saved with Western surgery.”

Subject: In The Farm on the River Emeralds, the author (1915–91) returns to Ecuador to purchase and hack a farm out of the jungle with his friend Ramón from Rioverde. Thomsen and Ramón struggle to establish the farm, hire workers, and adjust to the community.

Subject: The author, a California farmer, became a Peace Corps farmer in Ecuador at the age of 44. This is a chronicle of his experience living in the Ecuadorian coastal village of Rioverde during his Peace Corps service.

Publisher’s description: “The Saddest Pleasure is a deeply personal look at the people, poverty, beauty, art, music, literature, and passion of South America by an American who has spent most of his life there. Moritz Thomsen was one of the early Peace Corps volunteers. Through his skill as a writer, he vividly brings to life the people and landscapes he loves. The Saddest Pleasure tells the story of Thomsen’s desperate departure from Ecuador at the age of sixty-three and his soul-searching journey through Brazil and the Amazon River. Along the way, the author reflects on the meaning of his own life and the world around him, his friendships, and on the distances between people and cultures. Thomsen’s spirited observations are tinged with irascibility, as he moves from city to feudal countryside, from primitive conditions to the startlingly contemporary details of a culture in transition. Paul Theroux’s introduction to this book is a testament to Mr. Thomsen’s remarkable life.”

Publisher’s description: “Washington Post in reviewing My Two Wars. Thomsen here describes the two great battles in his life—one against his rich, tyrannical father; the other against German pilots and antiaircraft gunners in 1943 and 1944. Thomsen had an abiding hatred for his father, and with this portrait of the man he has given us one of literature’s true monsters.”

Publisher’s description: “This volume examines growth and change in American anthropology as the field has been influenced by Peace Corps volunteers. It does so through writings by 21 former Peace Corps volunteers, including the editors, who became professional anthropologists. Part I creates a general profile of Peace Corps volunteers who entered careers in anthropology. Part II presents specific accounts that discuss each of the contributors’ motivations for joining the Peace Corps. The contributors also discuss their corps experiences, their reasons for choosing or maintaining careers in anthropology, the matches and mismatches of academic anthropology with experiences in the field, and the impact of the Peace Corps experience on academic anthropology.”

Publisher’s description: “Bureaucratizing the Good Samaritan is about the organization of refugee relief programs. It describes the practical, political, and moral assumptions of the “international refugee relief regime.” Tony Waters emphasizes that the agencies delivering humanitarian relief are embedded in rationalized bureaucracies whose values are determined by their institutional frameworks. The demand for “victims” is observed in the close relation between the interests of the popular press and the decisions made by bureaucracies. This presents a paradox in all humanitarian relief organizations, but perhaps no more so than in the Rwanda Relief Operations (1994-96) which ended in the largest mass forced repatriation since the end of World War II. This crisis is analyzed with an assumption that there is a basic contradiction between the demands of the bureaucratized organization and the need of relief agencies to generate the emotional publicity to sustain the interest of northern donors. The book concludes by noting that if refugee relief programs are to become more effective, the connection between the press’s emotional demands for “victims” and the bureaucratic organization’s decision processes need to be identified and reassessed.”

Publisher’s description: “In an irresistible reimagining of the Robin Hood legend, Maid Marian brings to life the rollicking—and romantic—world of the Middle Ages. … Determined not to be sold into another sham marriage, she seeks out the one man whose spies can help uncover the queen’s plans: Robin Hood, the notorious Saxon outlaw of Sherwood Forest.”

Publisher’s description: “When the Soviet Army that kept Hungary’s communist government in power for 40 years marched away in 1990, they left an economically despondent heavily polluted country whose dispirited people had become cynical and embittered by too many broken promises of happy tomorrows in exchange for hard work and sacrifice today. Their life expectancy was among the world’s lowest and their suicide rate among the highest. By the middle 1990s, Hungary was being hailed as “The economic miracle of post-communist Eastern Europe.” Virginia White observed the transformation and chronicled it in Over the Hill in Hungary. At an age when most people are planning their retirement or may be already retired, she went to Hungary with the U.S. Peace Corps and taught English in a “gymnasium” (high school)…”

Publisher’s description: “President John F. Kennedy established the Peace Corps on March 1, 1961. In the fifty years since, nearly 200,000 Americans have served in 139 countries, providing technical assistance, promoting a better understanding of American culture, and bringing the world back to the United States. In Voices from the Peace Corps: Fifty Years of Kentucky Volunteers, Angene Wilson and Jack Wilson…follow the experiences of volunteers as they make the decision to join, attend training, adjust to living overseas and the job, make friends, and eventually return home to serve in their communities. They also describe how the volunteers made a difference in their host countries and how they became citizens of the world for the rest of their lives…. Voices from the Peace Corps emphasizes the value of practical idealism in building meaningful cultural connections that span the globe.”

Publisher’s description: “A glorious literary debut set in Africa about five unforgettable women—two of them haunted by a shared tragedy—whose lives intersect in unexpected and sometimes explosive ways…. At once deeply moving and utterly charming, The Civilized World follows five women as they face meddling mothers-in-law, unfaithful partners, and the lingering aftereffects of racism, only to learn that their cultural differences are outweighed by their common bond as women. With vibrant prose, Susi Wyss explores what it means to need forgiveness—and what it means to forgive.”
