

Collection of Family Information About Adoptees and Their Birth Families: Summary of State Laws

Requirements for collecting information about adoptees and their birth relatives vary from State to State. All 50 States, the District of Columbia, American Samoa, Guam, the Northern Mariana Islands, and Puerto Rico have statutes that specify the kinds of information that may be collected and shared with the adopting parents.

Agency or Person Preparing the Report

State laws specify the persons or entities authorized to prepare a report about the conditions and antecedents (family history) of the child to be adopted. In most States, information about the child and his or her birth family is compiled by the child-placing agency, the State's department of social services, or other designated person or agency that arranged the adoption. In approximately 10 States, the Northern Mariana Islands, and Puerto Rico, the court may designate another qualified person, such as a social worker or specially trained investigator, to complete the report on the birth family.<sup>1</sup> In approximately nine States, the child's parent or other person placing the child for adoption is required to submit family information to the court.<sup>2</sup>

Contents of Report About the Adoptee

Generally, information compiled about the adoptee includes medical and genetic history, family and social background, mental health history, placement history, and any history of abuse or neglect. In 15 States, the requirements ask for detailed information on the child, including medical and developmental history, as well as any school records.<sup>3</sup> In five States and the District of Columbia, the report must provide the child's religious and ethnic background, if known.<sup>4</sup>

In four States, the report must indicate whether the adoptee is an Indian child, and, if so, whether the placement complies with the Indian Child Welfare Act.<sup>5</sup> In Alabama, Pennsylvania, the District of Columbia, and American Samoa, the report must disclose any known assets or property owned by the child. Massachusetts requires verification that the adoptee is not listed on the Federal register of missing children. Approximately seven States require information on whether the child is eligible for any State or Federal adoption assistance.<sup>6</sup>

Contents of Report About the Birth Family

States generally require reports that include information about the birth parents' medical and genetic histories, family and social backgrounds, mental health histories, religious backgrounds, ethnic and racial backgrounds, and educational levels attained. In 16 States, the same types of information must be collected and disclosed about extended family members, including grandparents, aunts, and uncles, whenever possible.<sup>7</sup> Some States also provide for information to be collected on physical appearance, talents, hobbies, field of occupation, and drugs taken by the mother during pregnancy. In most instances, only nonidentifying information is shared with the adopting parents.<sup>8</sup> However, in Colorado, New York, and American Samoa, names, addresses, and other identifying information about the birth parents, if obtainable, must be included in the reports.

When the Report Is Made

The timeframes for collecting the information and making a report about the birth family vary from State to State. In 20 States, the information must be provided to the prospective adoptive parents prior to the placement of the child.<sup>9</sup> In seven States, American Samoa, and the District of Columbia, the report on the birth family's background must be included with the adoption petition.<sup>10</sup> Three States require relinquishing birth parents to submit family and medical information to the court at the time that parental rights are terminated.<sup>11</sup>

In nine States and Puerto Rico, statutes require the court to order a study and report when the initial application to adopt is filed, with specific time limits for completion.<sup>12</sup> Nine States, Guam, and the Northern Mariana Islands require the report to be submitted prior to the final hearing on the adoption petition.<sup>13</sup> Maryland will provide any available information on the birth family to the adoptive parents upon request.

In 23 States, American Samoa, and the District of Columbia, an investigation into a child's family background is not required when the child is being adopted by his or her stepparent.<sup>14</sup> In 18 States, the requirement is waived if the child is being adopted by a close relative.<sup>15</sup> If the adoptee is an adult, no report is required in seven States and the District of Columbia.<sup>16</sup> Other cases in which the requirement may be waived include adoption by a legal guardian (in American Samoa), by the parent's domestic partner (in the District of Columbia), or by a person named in a deceased parent's will (in New Mexico).

In all cases, the court, in its discretion, may order an investigation.
