Foreword

The Bureau of Health Professions of the Health Resources and Services Administration (HRSA) has a mission to provide leadership to improve the training, distribution, utilization, and quality of personnel required to staff the nation's health care system. The Geriatric Education Centers (GECs), which are funded by HRSA, have become recognized as a national force in educating health educators and health professionals to provide appropriate care to older adults in this country. Thus, the Interdisciplinary, Geriatrics and Allied Health Branch receives frequent requests for educational materials developed by the GECs.

The Bureau is grateful for the assistance of Dr. Joan B. Wood and her staff of the Virginia GEC for the compilation of this Resource Directory. The GECs are continually involved in the development of educational programs and resources. The current collection represents materials available to the public in the Spring of 1998. Individual GECs may be contacted for more recent materials.

For the convenience of those seeking educational materials on a particular topic, the Directory has been compiled by content area. It has also been cross-indexed by GEC and by format. The format categories are: written materials, electronic multimedia resources, and presentation packages.

It is our hope that schools of health professions, community agencies, professional associations, provider groups, and others interested in education/training materials in geriatrics will benefit from the use of this Directory.

1. What Makes Learning Powerful: Problem Based Learning In the past few years, a lot of attention has been given to the need for adult learners to be active in the process of learning. One of the strategies that has been associated with active learning is the Problem-Based style. In this video, Dr. Wilkerson discusses advantages of this process. California Geriatric Education Center	1993

5. Curriculum Module Series: Health Promotion for Older Adults Northwest Geriatric Education Center. About the series: Curriculum modules provide the reader with: <ul style="list-style-type: none">•current information and relevant research findings useable in community settings•current information regarding the efficacy of intervention strategies with older adults•assistance in identifying related resources and materials Each Curriculum Module contains the following six sections: Section I - Background - a review of the current knowledge base of the problem, its scope, who it affects, and current research findings. New information on screening and assessment are included as appropriate. Section II - Overview of Health Promotion Strategies - an overview of the health promotion strategies and a description of relevant efficacy (effectiveness) research.

The remaining 3 sections of the module focus on more practice-oriented issues.

Section III - Strategies to Implement in Community Sites - a listing of specific strategies that can be implemented in community sites. Listing of strategies includes descriptions and commentary on their use. In essence, these strategies serve as a menu from which practitioners from different disciplines can select to develop a comprehensive health promotion intervention plan.

Section IV - Challenges - this section alerts readers with respect to areas of concern or difficulty they are likely to encounter as they develop/implement specific interventions.

Section V - Case Study(ies) - case studies (fictionalized or real-life) included in this section reflect the thinking process that results in selection of specific strategies, a description of client outcomes, illustrations of pitfalls, and how problems were or were not resolved.

Section VI - Resources - a list of resources to assist and support in implementing health promotion interventions. Many listed resources are available on loan from the Northwest Geriatric Education Center's library free-of-charge.

Guide 1: Conceptions of Health and Illness Among Older Blacks in America

(Wilbur Watson, Ph.D.)

Belief systems play major roles in human health behaviors. This guide provides extensive discussions on beliefs in the occult, the spiritual, in folk medicine, etc., and on how those beliefs influence our health behaviors and outcomes. Traditional medical practices are compared to modern biomedical ones.

Guide 2: A Historical Overview of Health and Older Blacks in America

(Wilbur Watson, Ph.D.)

A discussion of the impact of slavery and its practices on the health of African Americans is given along with an extensive annotated bibliography. For generations, the only healthcare available to African Americans during slavery was via traditional healers. Belief systems developed that continue to influence health decisions made by African Americans today.

Guide 3: Normal Aging and Health of Older Blacks in Modern American Society (Veronica J. Scott, M.D., MPH)

The World Health Organization's definition of health is used as the framework to discuss psychological, social, and physical variables that affect health status. Critical life events are discussed and black/white older adult comparisons are made. Social indices and barriers to access of care are discussed in the context of differential morbidity and mortality.

Guide 4: Acute and Chronic Illness in Older Blacks in America

(Veronica J. Scott, M.D., MPH)

The ten major causes of death in older African Americans are discussed in the context of acute and chronic illness. The interactive effects on health outcomes are discussed for co-morbid conditions commonly found in older blacks, e.g., diabetes, kidney disease, hypertension, stroke, and heart disease.

Guide 5: The Aging Eye: A Focus on Glaucoma in Older Blacks

(Ronald McFarland, M.D.)

The consequences of vision loss in older adults are discussed along with eye anatomy, eye physiology, and common eye conditions such as diabetic retinopathy, glaucoma, cataracts, and macular degeneration. Conditions of particular concern to older blacks are discussed in detail.

The above guides are available for $395.00 each or $1,580.00 (plus $20.00 Shipping and Handling) for all five. Contact: Veronica J. Scott, M.D., MPH at MCGEC.
